STATEMENT MUST BE PUBLISHED

CHANGE MADE DURING 1925 SESSION OF LEGISLATURE

Township Clerks Must Publish Itemized List of Expenditures Before April Election

One of the most important and far reaching changes in the Michigan laws was enacted during the 1925 session of the legislature. Under the new law, township clerks must publish an itemized statement of the financial affairs of the township each year prior to the April election. And this ruling means an itemized statement, showing every item of expenditure during the current year.

Also instead of giving legal notice of registrntion, elections and various other matters by tacking notices on a post or building somewhere, the law now requires that they be published in a newspaper.

The law that purported to require the publishing of an itemized annual township financial statement did not seem clear. The matter was brought to our attention by several township clerks, and we told them we thought, as we read the law, that the statement should be published. None, however, complied with the law as it has been construed.

The Elk Rapids Progress, placed in the same position, put the matter up to Attorney General Andrew B. Dougherty and last week received a letter stating that the attorney general's office had ruled that the law meant the annual report must be published in a newspaper. The letter follows:

State of Michigan,
Attorney General's Department,
Lansing, April 20th, 1926

Mr. M. H. Mattison,
Elk Rapids, Michigan.

Dear Sir:

We are in receipt of your letter of the 15th inst. in which you ask for information about publishing the annual report of the township board. You wish to know whether the report must be published in a newspaper or whether it can be written and circulated among the electors on election day, and posted in the place of holding the township meeting.

This department has heretofore ruled that an itemized statement of the financial affairs of the township as outlined in Section 2129 must be published in a newspaper in addition to posting the same at the place of holding the township meeting and distributed among the electors.

Trusting this gives you the information desired, I remain,

Yours very truly,
Clare Retan,
Deputy Attorney General.

ATTRACTIVE PRICES FOR LAKE FRONTAGE

12,000 Acre Tract Sold in Mackinac County

A tract of 12,000 acres in Mackinac county, between Brevot Lake and the shore line of Lake Michigan, with frontage on both lakes, recently was sold for $80,000, according to G. E. Bishop, of Marquette, secretary of the Upper Peninsula Development bureau. The land was sold by Embury Martin Lumber company of Cheboygan to the Brooks Land company of Detroit, which will use it for a resort subdivision project.

"Further," said Mr. Bishop, "a tract west of this on Lake Michigan belonging to Fitzpatrick & Dennison, recently sold for $35,000, according to Royal A. Fultz, prominent real estate dealer of Cheboygan. Prnetically all of Lake Michigan shore line between Manistique and St. Ignace has been sold or is now under option."

"From these sales," declared Mr. Bishop, "we can see that the heralded demand for resort property in the upper peninsula is materializing."

SHELTER MUST BE GIVEN FOR SHEEP

Because sheep require less attention than any other farm animal, they are most frequently neglected. Likewise there is no farm animal that will respond to good treatment as will sheep.

The cardinal principles in the winter care of breeding sheep are dry backs and dry feet, exercise and protection from exposure.

While the ewes will not be injured by getting covered with snow, they will suffer severely in a cold, drizzling rain that lasts for some time. The inevitable result of such exposure being a general outbreak of colds, many of which will develop into lung trouble that is generally fatal. Tar smeared on the noses of sheep having had colds is highly recommended by some.

Provision must be made for regular shelters if best results are expected. Sheep that are obliged to seek shelter in a shed or barn with the colts and calves seldom do well and injuries are common. The ideal shelter need not be warm, in fact warm basements are injurious in that they cause sweating which makes the sheep susceptible to colds. A light, board structure, well ventilated but not drafty, that has a good roof, is most suitable for the ewes. In case early lambs are expected it will be necessary to have the building somwhat warmer.

As previously stated, dry feet are also necessary for sheep. A good, dry pasture makes an excellent place for ewes to spend their days during the winter months when the weather permits. Yards and sheds need careful attention to drainage to prevent them from getting sloopy after a rain or thaw. When the supply permits, bright straw scattered about the yards, as well as in the shed is appreciated by the sheep.

Exercise has been found in countless cases to have a direct influence on the lamb crop. Pampered sheep kept in a small yard invariably have difficulty in lambing while the lambs are of low vitality and a high percentage are born dead. If a good pasture is available at not too great distance from the barns it is the best place for the ewes when the weather is fit. Even though they may not get much grass they do get exercise. Where it is not possible to get the flock out to pasture frequently, artificial means of exercise are necessary. By breaking a road through the snow, hay may be scattered for some distance and the sheep required to go after it.

Feeding is not a difficult problem for the man who has plenty of clover or alfalfa hay and some bright corn stover. Successful ewe feeding is almost impossible without some legume hay. However, if used as the sole roughage, it frequently is the cause of such large lambs that great difficulty is experienced at the time of parturition. Corn stover, timothy hay, or even bright oat straw largely prevents such trouble.

RESULTS THAT LAST!

Proved By Charlevoix People.

Thousands of kidney sufferers have tried remedy after remedy with only temporary benefit. That's mighty discouraging! But one kidney remedy has earned a reputation for lasting results and there's plenty of proof right here in Charlevoix.

Read the experience of one who used Doan's Pills years ago and now makes her endorsement even stronger.

Mrs. Frank Smith, 307 May St., Charlevoix says: "My back was sore, stiff and achy and when I did my stooping, pains darted across my kidneys. I felt nervous, depressed and completely worn out. Dizzy spells also came over me and my kidneys acted irregularly. I used a few boxes of Doan's Pills and they completely cured me." (Statement given May 4, 1920.)

On October 9, 1924, Mrs. Smith said: "The cure Doan's made for me has been lasting."

THIRD in the World

-and Sales still mounting

During the first three month of 1926 Dodge Brothers, Inc., built and sold more motor vehicles than any other manufacturer in the world, except Ford and Chevrolet.

71,189 retail deliveries were made by Dodge Brothers Dealers in the United States and Canada between January second and April third. This represents a gain of 37 per cent over the same period last year and 69 per cent over the first quarter of 1924!

Third largest in the world! And sales CONTINUING to mount week after week to new record breaking levels.

In fact, during the week ending April 24th retail sales reached the remarkable total of 9,566—the greatest single week in Dodge Brothers history!

These figures are all the more significant when you realize that the gain of the industry as a whole over last year is only 12 per cent.

There could be no more convincing evidence that today's product is regarded as better than ever before and that the present prices make it the most impressive value Dodge Brothers have ever offered.

STRAITS REGION MAGAZINE OUT

INITIAL NUMBER NOW BEING DISTRIBUTED

Profusely Illustrated and Has Interesting Contents and Abundant Advertising

The initial number of the Northern Michigan Magazine, is now being distributed and appears to fill the requirements of an official resort organ for the straits region.

The new publication contains thirty-two pages with covers printed in two colors. The front cover carries railroad map of the straits country and the articles, covering various historical spots and points of beauty and interest, written by residents of the region familiar with its history and topography, are profusely illustrated.

Among the contributors are W. Ray Barnes, Ira Chichester, Geo. W. McCabe and Wilson J. McDonald of Petoskey. Others are: C. F. Whitehield, Rhea Kimball McColl and O. J. Laylander.

Subjects covered are as follows: "Historic Mackinac Straits Region," "Where Does the North Begin," (Peom), "The Straits Region in Summer time," "The Cottages and Cottagers," "The Golf Links, From a Golfer's Standpoint," "Hunting and Fishing," "The Garage Service of the of the Straits Region." There are also uncredited items of the new realty firm of Porter, Emrey & Healy, Ramona Park and the Safety Motor Coach lines.

A notable amount of regional advertising is carried in this first issue and promises well for the success of the venture.

Much credit is due the editor and owner, C. E. Kimball, of Petoskey, for having produced a most attractive magazine. Mr. Kimball, who formerly operated a printing establishment in Chicago, brings to his knowledge and by reason of his task the necessary technical long acquaintance with the region; first, as a summer visitor and latterly as a resident, is well qualified to guide the destinies of the new enterprise.

PETOSKEY ADOPTS TRAFFIC ORDINANCE

Stop Streets Designated and Parking Limit Made

Petoskey adopted Tuesday a new traffic ordinance in which many changes were made over the one previously in effect. Practically the entire route of M-11 through the city was made through traffic street. A two hour parking limit has been provided between July 1 and October 1 in the business district in three of the most important streets. Speed regulations remain as provided by the state law, with a 15 mile limit in the business section and 20 miles in the residential section, except near school and entering or leaving alleys.

We congratulate Petoskey on the move made, especially with regard to the time limit on parking cars within the business district. Charlevoix has an ordinance somewhat to this effect, which last season was more or less enforced. We hope to see it enforced this year to the letter.

Traffic on Bridge street is becoming more congested each year. If our towns people occupy available parking space, what is to be done with the hundreds of tourists who when passing through our city, desire to stop and stay awhile? We all want the money they leave, but some seem to think their personal rights are being infringed upon if asked to keep their pleasure cars off Bridge street.

In our opinion cars on one side of the street should be parked parallel. Also no U turns should be tolerated anywhere on Bridge street from Michigan avenue to Upright avenue. Rigid enforcement on all stop streets is absolutely necessary, both for pedestrians and automobiles. Let's start the season right and have no serious accidents.

FORMER RESIDENT DIED IN DETROIT

Remains Buried in Brookside Cemetery Last Thursday

The burial of William A. Sanford, former Charlevoix resident, who passed away in Detroit last Tuesday, was made in Brookside cemetery last Thursday, Rev. Herman Burns of the Baptist church officiating.

William A. Sanford was born August 19, 1868, in Livingston county, New York. At the age 14 he came with his parents to Michigan, where he spent all of his life except one year.

He was married to Mary R. Nobles December 5, 1894. There are left to mourn their loss his wife, four daughters, Mrs. D. H. Brainerd of Adrain, Mrs. F. W. Wells of Detroit, Mrs. Floyd Elliott of Lansing and Miss Marie Sanford of Detroit; four sons, Homer, Clinton, Verne and Emerson of Detroit; three sisters, two brothers and three grandchildren.

For many years he had been a member of the Baptist church of Charlevoix, and every since childhood a believer in the Infinite God and Savior of mankind. Throughout his life he was a true, loving husband and father, a great home lover, and a loyal friend.

BAPTIST CHURCH

Despite the storm a greatly interested audience gathered last Sunday morning and listened to a talk on "public safety" which was inspired by the accidental death of little four-year-old Kenneth Nowland. This sad event should stir the community to renewed effort to prevent similar accidents in the future. This child suddenly ran in front of a loaded truck driven by Albert Shaw who was exonerated by the coroner's jury of all fault. It was suggested that drivers—all drivers—double their efforts to be careful and strictly obey the laws governing traffic. And that parents be diligent in keeping their children off the streets—especially those thoroughfares where the traffic is heavy and often congested. Diligence on the part of the whole community will be fruitful in saving lives.

The interest of the Baptists of this locality will center in the meeting of the Grand Traverse association at Petoskey on Thursday and Friday of this week. State and National speakers will add interest to this gathering.

The Ladies' Mission Circle are meeting today with Mrs. Chas. Taylor on S. Bridge street, and the Aid Society will hold a bake-sale in the Holly Gift Shop on Saturday.

The Sunday services will be as usual, and a cordial invitation is extended to all who are not worshipping elsewhere to do so with us. While our services are strictly religious we believe the themes are of general interest to all. So, come and we will try to do you good.

DANCING-BRIDGE PARTIES AT THE OLDHAM

Social Affairs to Be Held Every Two Weeks

Invitations sent out by The Oldham Club management are in the mails announcing that hereafter during the present season, a series of dancing and bridge parties will be held every two weeks, commencing with Friday evening of this week.

Freeman Huntley's orchestra will furnish the music, which in itself should prove a drawing card. These social affairs are the result of frequent requests from members of the younger set, as well as those of more mature age, not only in Charlevoix; but from Boyne City, East Jordan, Petoskey and Harbor Springs. All seem to enjoy the dances at The Oldham and the every-other-week affairs will no doubt be well patronized.

RARE BLUE GEESE FEEDING NEAR CITY

Hundreds Make Trip to Wiles Farm to View Uousual Sight

Nature and bird lovers have been given a rare treat during the past ten days by the presence of a flock of Blue nnd Snow geese which has been feeding in the meadows west of the Wm. Wiles farm on M-11. Hundreds of people have made the trip to view this unusual and beautlful sight.

It is estimated that there are around ninety birds in the flock, most of which are the rare blue goose, a species which is now nearly extinct. The balance of the flock is made of the beautiful white snow geese. Both birds are vegetarians and feed on tender sprouts nf grass. They are evidentally resting on their flight north and are very tame, allowing anyone to approach within a few rods of them. It is indeed a rare sight, one which will be witnessed on very few occasions.

GUESS WE WILL GO VISITING

TASTE FOR CHICKEN OVER- COMES ANY SUSPICION

Courier Ed. Receives Letter from Farmer Friend That Has Him Guessing

" As usual, something happens that takes all the joy out of your well laid plans. The Courier editor and his family have frequently visited the home of one of our nearby prosperous farmers. He's a good fellow, entertains and feeds well, and we have always enjoyed these visits.

We had our annual visit in mind —in fact, could actually taste the good fried chicken they filled us up with, when the following letter reached us. It has us stumped. We wonder if he is being sarcastic? We seldom visited him over twice a year and always told him how we enjoyed the visit, how well we appreciated his fine dinners and entertainment, etc. Seems to us that he has no kick coming at all. Just two feeds a year—pshaw.

The good wife says he is kidding us and that she will make her spring visit even if she has to hire a taxi and make the trip alone. Under these conditions, we believe we'll save the price of the taxi. Here is his letter. He says we will come anyway, so we are going:

"Sir and Editor:—Now that the snow has gone and the weather has moderated somewhat so we ean turn out in the morning and do a little plowing, even if it is a trifle frosty and cold, wo happened to think of you, so I take my pen in hand. As I mentioned to the woman this morning, it's about time for a letter from you folks inviting yourselves out in a month or more, and I says I'll save them the embarrassment and invite 'em. The woman answers that you might as well as they'll come anyway which is like a woman. I might say here however, though, that it's a backward spring and the fried chicken may be a couple of weeks late in maturin', that in the past having had considerable connections with the time of your visits.

"Things have been about so-and-so this winter. As you so often remark, us farmers don't have much to do. We only kept 14 and 15 cows this winter, which required milking twice a day, the milk also taking attention to-whit: toted into the house, strained, aeparated, tho cream put into cans and the skim milk packed out to the shoats. Other details such as feeding the cows and keeping the water tanks thawed, and the horses fed and the wood cut and the cow barn clean and tbe milks clean is minor. Only forty hogs was kept this winter, we considering it too much trouble to carry much feed the forty rod from the crib to the pens. We have but 39 head now, one beIng butchered last week. Hoping you are the same, I am respy,

E. J. J."

Of particulnr interest locally Is the fact that Hugh J. FORMER LOCAL MEN DIES IN GRAND RAPIDS

H. Peter Hansen Made Charlevoix His Home Many Years

The following account of the death of H. Peter Hansen, former manager of the Charlevoix and Alhambra hotels in this city, who died in Grand Rapids, Thursday, May 6, is taken from the Grand Rapids Press:

"H. Peter Hansen, 71, who managed the Peninsular club for 17 years of its early history, died Thursday in Butterworth hospital.

Funeral services will be held st the Berton Spring chapel Saturday afternoon under auspices of DeMolai commnndery. Relatives include the widow, a daughter, Maxine Hansen, two brothers, Christian of Charlevoix and William of Sault Ste. Marie and a sister, Mrs. Carrie Knudsen of San Franeisco.

Mr. Hansen, who was born in Copenhagen, Denmark, came to this country when 11 years of age, the family settling at Greenville and later removing to Grand Rapids. He at one time was manager of the Hotel Charlevoix, Charlevoix, and later of the Alhambra hotel there. Mr. Hansen was a member of Charlevoix lodge, F. & A. M., DeWitt Clinton consistory, Saladin temple and DeMolai commandery, Knights Templar.

NOT STRICTLY LEGAL THIS YEAR

CHANGE OF PRIMARY DATE CAUSES CONFUSION

This Arrangement Doesn't Give Time to Certify Returos to State Party Secretaries

It will be impossible to hold a strictly legal election in Michigan in November, says a Lansing dispatch, but state officials say nothing can be done about it and continue to make preparations, complying with the law as nearly as possible.

The difficulty was brought about by fixing the September primary date one week later in the month than formerly and by the unfavorable makeup of the 1926 ealendar.

Under the law, the primary is held on the second Tuesday in September, which falls on the 14th, this year, the latest possible date. The general election is held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday. This date this year is the earliest possible, November 2nd.

The law provides that the state board of canvassers shall certify returns to party secretaries ten days before the party convention. It is impossible, authorities say, to canvas returns within two weeks of the primary date. The earliest date the board of eanvassers can meet this year is, therefore, September 28th, which is fourteen days after the primaries. If the returns were certified immediately, the convention would not to be held until October 6th. The present plan is to hold October convention Octoher 8th; allowing two days for the party leaders to consider results of the popular vote in seleeting convention nominees.

NEW PARK IS A CREDIT TO CITY

BAND STAND AND WHARVES NEXT ON PROGRAM

Shrubbery and Trees Set Out This Week Make Spot One of Great Beauty

Charlevoix's water front park on the former Legion lot at the corner of Bridge street and Belvedere avenue nnd the recently acquired Carpenter property is being trasnsformed into a spot of beauty, one whicb Charlevoix citizens can well he proud of.

During the past few weeks a crew of men have heen working on the grounds, grading and levelling off the plot, laying water pipes snd electric light wires. Two sets of cement stairs, one on the Bridge street side and one on the Belvedere avenue side, hnve been built leading down into the park. Four large electric lights will illuminate the entrance, one on each corner post of the stairs, and two large boulevard lights similar to those on State street will be used in the center of the pnrk.

On Tuesday of this week, under the direction of George Hemingway and George McMulkin of the Charlevoix County Nurseries, trees and shrubbery were set out. Three rows of French maple and birch trees run through the center of the park. On ench corner has been pinced groups of Colorado and white spruce and pyr-arb-votae. Along the outside border of the park are rows of spirea, hydranga and dog wood, along with several other varieties.

The same program is to be carried out on the former Carpenter property. The grounds will be graded and terraced off toward the lake and set out with shruhbery the same as the Legion lot. It is proposed to erect a band stand on this property, the floor of which will be on a level with Bridge street, with the lower part to be used as a public toilet. Plans have been accepted for the new wharves on Round lake at the foot of the park and the contract will be let as soon as bids are received.

In our opinion, this is one of the most beneficial forwnrd moves taken by the city for some time. To keep up our reputation as a resort city, we must furnish attractions for our visitors. Those who our prone to believe that the city is wasting money on the project will see their error during the coming summer.

BEAVER AIR SERVICE GETS NEW SEAPLANE

Will Engage in Passenger Service from Northero Airports

The company recently formed on Benver Island, Michigan, known as The Beaver Island Air Service, which recently acquired two aeroplanes, has now sent its pilot, Captain J. F. Donnellan to New Jersey to bring back a large seaplane with a capacity of 12 passengers and 1-2 ton baggage. With its equipment of three planes the new company intends to engage in the transportation, of passengers from Northern Michigan airports; nnd also hopes to get government contracts to carry the mnils to and from the islands in winter.

The newly acquired seaplane is to be shipped, crnted, on a box car to Harbor Springs, Mich., where the owners expect to load it upon the motor boat Rambler for transportation to Saint James, Beaver Island, where it will be assembled. The plane will probahly arrive at Hnrbor Springs about May 15.

It is reported that the government will start work repairing the Charlevoix-Beaver Island telephone cable about May 15, if lake conditions are favorable. This cable has been out of service since January; and for some time communications with the Island were possible only by means of radio, a situation that was relieved when the air mail was instituted early in March. The owners of the boat Rnmbler has bid on this cable repnir job.

"If you will pardon me, I have much to see to on deck. Should you desire any refreshment do but ring that bell and state your wants to the steward Robert, if you and Peter can so far submerge your Hanoverian sympathies I should appreciate such aid as you might render in the accounting of the treasure."

Peter and I went with him, as much to escape the company of the Irishman as to satisfy our curiosity regarding the chests and boxes we had glimpsed in transit across the Santissima Trinidad's deck. 'Twas a marvelous concentration of wealth. The columns of figures I set down never condescended to detail—5,000 pieces of eight, they would run, or 10,000 doubloons, 12,000 onzas, 20,000 castellanos, 25,000 eights, and so on. There was upward of two hundred thousand pounds in bar silver, fifty-pound ingots sheathed by threes in thick canvas jackets to facilitate their transport by mule-trains—each mule carrying a load of three hundred pounds. There was a quantity, too, of gold bullion, each ingot of eighty pounds in its own canvas jacket. There were a chest of precious stones, the value of which we could only guess at, and three chests of plate.

The total value, by the government estimates upon each package, chest or keg, was £1,563,995 in English money, exclusive of the jewels and the plate; and we did not conclude the accounting and bestowal of the treasure in Ben Gunn's wine-cellar until an hour past dusk, when Murray dismissed all hands with an extra ration of rum.

In the cabin we found Colonel O'Donnell asleep sprawled on the table with his head rested on his folded arms, a puddle of wine by his elbow. My uncle's eyebrows twitched upward.

"This gentleman is a chamberlain to King James, Robert," he remarked; "a Knight of Malta and of Santiago in Spain, a colonel of Spanish engineers and lord of I know not how many bog-manors in Ireland if he had his rights. And look at him!"

"Who brought him to this?" I retorted.

"Not I, my boy! To intrigue is not necessarily to license appetite. Well, well, 'tis doubtly fortunate I induced him to fetch along the little maid. Consider her plight in a Spanish convent, if anything happened to her father."

"Consider her plight in a pirate ship, if anything happened to him!" I jeered.

He appealed to Peter, whimsicality humorous.

"Stap me, the boy wears upon my nerves! Was ever a youth so callow in his assurance of righteousness?"

Peter's little eyes twinkled.

"He is right, uncle you are right. You are a big rascal, but dot time maybe you was right."

"Don't be an idiot, Peter," I rasped.

"'Tis you are the idiot," affirmed my great-uncle. "Here are you and Peter—two honest men if any ever were—and myself, with less claim to virtue perhaps, but as acute an interest, if the truth be known. And all three of us a-hungering to safeguard the lass. What mother might ask more?"

"And Flint," I amended. "He'd protect her, I suppose."

"He'll never have the chance, Robert," he answered gravely. "You and Peter have played ducks and drakes, between you, with my plans; but John Flint is not the man to overreach me. Give him rope, lad—and we'll present him his chance to hang.

I was up early in the morning, but Mistress O'Donnell and my great-uncle were before me. As I climbed to the poop I saw them standing by the weather rail, Murray expressing deference in every line of his straight figure and handsome, old-young face, the little maid eyeing him with a comical mixture of nuttpathy and respect.

"Here is my nephew, who will settle all your remaining doubts, Mistress Moira," proclaimed Murray; "and with your leave I'll be about my morning inspection."

She watched his retreating back with a kind of fascination.

"Sure, I ne'er met the like of him," she said at last. "He puts me in mind of the grand gentry the padre brings to see me in Madrid—and him a pirate! But I'm thinking yourself will be the same queer sort, Master Corporal, you that can be generous and gallant to a foolish maid and as cruel as the wildest the Indians showed us in the hills up behind Porto Bello."

"It must seem so to you," I answered. "But the truth is that I am as much the sport of Fate as yourself."

"Do you tell me so?" she replied politely.

"Do but let me tell you my story," I pleaded, "and you will think better of some things."

So I began at the beginning and told her all from the moment Darby McGraw had run into the counting-room in Pearl street—and how remote in time and place that seemed as we stared out upon the blue-green rollers of the Caribbean and the tropic sun warmed toward its noon intensity! She listened with mounting interest, never interrupting save for an occasional "Glory!" "Oh, blessed saints!" "Holy Virgin, can such things be!" But when I came to the escape from the Walrus she broke in upon me.

"And you did that to be handy by if I had need of you! Oh, sir, forget the wicked suspicions I owned!" 'Tis a true friend you will be—and the large gentleman, too. What is he called? Master Corbet? Alas, I am heavy in your debt, and always shall be."

"If Flint Has Der Feel for It It Don't Matter What You Show Him. He Wants All."

She was wholly trustful with Peter and me from then on and spent most of her time with us.

On the seventh morning after the action with the Santissima Trinidad we raised a slow, sandy islet, densely choked with low trees and bush growth, bare of any characteristic that invited human habitation. Murray approached it with caution, a man in the chains dipping the lead continually, and we came to anchor under its lee and a mile or more offshore.

In the meantime Martin and a party of some fifty men had been passing up treasure from the wine-cellar or lazaret; the anchor cable ran out and Murray issued an order to lower all the small boats.

He took snuff, staring contemplatively at the sand-hillocks of the Dead Man's chest.

"Here is my plan," he pursued. "I will have eight hundred thousand pounds set ashore in the boats—my own share of one hundred thousand, chevalier, as well as the seven hundred thousand pounds guaranteed to your friends. I will then land you four, with sufficient provisions, and bear away in the James to the so'th'ard, returning in five days to pick you up. In the intervening period you should be able to transport the treasure to a safe spot and bury it. In that way, chevalier, its safety can be assured until we are able to return for it with the James or some other craft dispatched by your friends."

"Your plan is maybe the best in the circumstances," answered O'Donnell.

There was more talk back and forth, but the end of it all was that O'Donnell accepted by great-uncle's plan, and Moira was won over likewise by the argument that so long as the treasure was stolen it had best be assured to a worthy purpose. Peter and I agreed for a complex of reasons—because of the little maid for one thing, and for another, because there was an excitement in the burlat of treasure which neither of us had tasted before, and also, of course, because, when all was said and done, we were prisoners and we must. But I'll never seek to deny that we had pleasure from the thrill that came to us late in the afternoon of that day as we stood on the narrow beach of the islet beside a great stack of kegs and chests, axes, pickaxes and shovels, a barrel of water and boxes of food from Ben Gunn's larder, watching the boat that had dangled as pall back to the James.

The first afternoon and evening we spent in selecting a hiding-place in a shallow valley protected from the terrible storms which sweep those seas. Colonel O'Donnell and Moira were detailed to do the digging, as neither was as capable as Peter and I of managing the weighty bulk of the casks and chests. And after that we worked unremittingly, except for a couple of hours at midday and a short snatch of sleep about dawn; for the starlit nights, with their bracing sea-winds, were the most comfortable times we had. Yet the topsils of the James were within sight before we had disposed of the last spadeful of sand from the hiding place and replanted its area with the trees and bushes we had removed with every care to preserve their roots.

CHAPTER XII

Suspicions

From the Dead Man's chest the Royal James headed northwest into the Atlantic. Murray knew that the Santissima Trinidad must have sent the tidings of his feat the length and breadth of the Antilles. By now the Spanish squadrons would have put to sea from San Juan de Porto Rico, Santo Domingo and the Havana, and the Caribbean would be aswarm with garda costas; but more to be feared than all the Spaniards' efforts would be the consequence of the complaint sure to be dispatched to the port admiral at Kingston. The Jamaica frigates would carry a hunting-call to every cruiser on the West Indian station.

We picked up a smart sou'easter and ran our westing down packet-fashion, with never a sail in sight for a week, until a morning when the sun came up at our backs like a burnished copper pinque and we saw the cone of the Spyglass lifting out of the haze ahead. A league or two farther on the whole island shaped itself beneath its spine of hills, and a column of smoke from the Spyglass told us that Flint's lookout had detected us.

The wind had continued strong through the night, but after dawn it turned puffy and 'twas nearly noon when we passed into Captain Kidd's anchorage on the last of the flood. There was a great hustle aboard the Walrus, with boats plying to and from the shore, and as our anchor splashed, the longboat put off from her side, Flint's red coat like a flame in the stern sheets.

"Glory!" exclaimed Moira O'Donnell, her blue eyes wide with delighted horror. "There's one I'd not need to have pointed out to me to know him a pirate—or the dreadful knaves that do be rowing the oars."

Her father glowered down at the heap of treasure, kegs, chests and packages which Murray had ordered fetched on deck that morning, and then stared off at Flint's gaudy figure.

"And 'tis to scoundrels like you ye'll be trusting the lives of all of us, Andrew Murray!" he snarled. "By times, man, I think there's a green madness in your brain. Why, the view of that gold and silver below would be sufficient to tempt better men than they to commit murder."

My great-uncle took snuff.

"Your diagnosis is correct, chevalier," he retorted. "They would cheerfully commit murder for a coveted knife or a sixpence with a hole in it. My design in revealing to them the entire extent of the treasure we carry is to impress them at once with my good faith and benumb their acquisitive faculties by the sight of greater wealth than they ever dreamed of obtaining at one time."

A snort from Peter diverted attention to the Dutchman.

"If Flint has der feel for it it don't matter whot you show him. He wants all."

"Ah!"

Murray regarded more attentively the boatload of pirates just rounding up to our port quarter.

"I see that Captain Flint has with him John Silver and the red haired Irish boy he calls his luck. Humph! You may be right, friend Peter. But I should not be greatly concerned over that. 'Twill do no harm if I reveal that it occurred to me that in many ways it might simplify our problem did Captain Flint resort to force."

The Irishman counted the gunports in the Walrus' side.

"He seems to carry as heavy metal—"

"But on the sea, as on the land, 'tis the brain which overmatches brute force, chevalier. You, who are an engineer, do not need to be reminded of this axiom. However, we are not yet come to the issue, and I am never one for engaging in a search for trouble."

"We are in an impasse," reflected O'Donnell, gloomily.

VALET AutoStrop Razor
sharpens itself

"Not at all," rejoined my great-uncle. "We have played our hand with entire success so far in the game. 'Tis now for us to sit back and await the plays of other participants. What they do must determine our next— But Captain Flint is come aboard. This conversation is without purpose, since fact must now displace conjecture."

He eyed us all somewhat gravely.

"I have but one word more to say," he added. "Whatever happens, leave me to do the talking."

"Ye'd do it whether we would or no," growled O'Donnell.

Flint climbed over the bulwarks with a racket of oaths and swaggered up to the poop. Martin dropped a whip from a block on the mainyard, and John Silver was hauled up in its flight, his crutch hanging from his neck. Darby and the rest scaled the side ladder and mingled with the James' crew. Their eyes popped from their heads as they circled the heap of treasure.

Their chief was equally frank in revealing the lust of greed the picture warmed in him. His green eyes flickered hotly on either side of his thin, beaked nose, and his blue jowl was bluer than ever, the weather-worn skin over his cheekbones laced with a network of crimson veins that brightened as his excitement increased.

Yet he forgot the treasure the instant his gaze fell upon Peter and me.

"So your hostages returned to ye, Murray? Gut me, 'twas a pretty trick ye played us! Yo'd keep faith wi' me, ye would! Oh, yea! Ye'd give me two hostages, instead o' one. You'll fulfill your contract, you will. There'a no need for it, to be sure, but ye'll do anything to prove good faith to me! And take both or none, says you. Both or none! Well, ye fooled me that time, Murray, but yo never will again, by thunder—not if my name's John Flint!"

My great-uncle heard him out in silence, waiting until he had stepped off the poop-ladder and stood facing us.

"I am not responsible for your losing the hostages," he replied then, in his level tones. "Stop me, Flint, I warned you your ship was in a disgraceful condition. With all hands drunk, did you think to keep fast two men of strength and intelligence?"

"Drunk or sober, we were promised them," assented Flint, a trifle less belligerently. "And sure, ye could ha' turned 'em back to us—not that that will do me any good for the two men they killed, they or whoever helped 'em to break from the Walrus."

GREETING THE TOURIST

It will be only a short while now until the highways will be dotted with automobiles carrying camping outfits, the vanguard of that big procession of tourists who will sweep through the state this summer in greater numbers than ever before, because we have been asking them to pay us a visit, having at last reached a realization of what we have to offer as a summer haven and appreciating that wherever the summer tourists tarries for a while he will leave that community a little richer for his having been there.

At the time we should not be actuated in our treatment of the tourists from the point of how much money he is going to spend with us, but from the broader viewpoint of the host who would make his guests comfortable and contented. There are many things we can do for the tourists that are not expensive, but will make him feel that we have his welfare at heart. We should see that he is supplied with all necessary information regarding highway travel, where the best streams and lakes abound, hotel and camp site accommodations may be had, in short, the little things that go to make up a pleasant trip for the stranger within our gates. Let us make Michigan hospitality something to rank alongside that old-fashioned hospitality that song and story has for so many years attributed to the old South.

BLESS BLOSSOMS AT MONTH'S END

Traverse City's Anoual Carnival Will Cover 3 Days

Again this year divine protection will be asked for the orchards of the Grand Traverse region when Traverse City stages its second annual Blessing of the Blossoms. Because of the late spring and uncertainty of blossom time the exact date of the festival cannot be decided at this time, but it will undoubtedly be the last Friday, Saturday and Sunday in May.

This year the festival will consume three days instead of two, as heretofore. The parade of blossoms and the crowning of the queen will take plnce on Friday afternoon. Saturday will be devoted to tours through the orchards and Saturdny night a street parade of fraternal orders and of "horribles" with fireworks will precede the queen's ball; Sunday will see a repetition of last year's religious ceremonies in the orchards and the literal blessing of the blossoms.

Traverse City is already busy preparing its floats for the big Friday parade and thus far more parade entries have been received than were in line last year. To spread interest in this event the committee this year will offer a community prize to go to some community outside Traverse City for the best float entered. In this way it is hoped to attract floats from the surrounding towns. A special prize will also be given to the rural school having the most attractive float in the spectacle.

AT THE MOVIES

Beauty-Comedy Special Heads Rialto Program

One of the most widely publicized and eagerly awaited screen productions will be unfolded to local moviegoers next Friday when Paramount's magnificent beauty-comedy-spectacle, "The American Venus," will be shown at the Palace Theatre.

This is the photoplay that has the recent Atlantic City bathing beauty pageant for its colorful background, and which includes in the personnel of its cast Fay Lanphier, who was crowned "Miss America," several of the leading national beauty contestants, twenty of the loveliest mannequins in America, to say nothing of a brilliant group of film and stage favorites, headed by Esther Ralston, Lawrence Gray and Ford Sterling.

"Just a Woman" is Nearly Ruined

The carelessness of a studio employee nlmost ruined "Just a Woman," scheduled to be shown nt the Palace Theatre next Saturday and Sunday, May 15 and 16.

The employee had neglected to shut off a faucet he had used in the United Studios storage room, and the negative of an important scene in the production of M. C. Levee's newest First National offering, was washed out by the water.

Pola in "Flower of Night"

For his first original sceen story, written especially for Pola Negri, Joseph Hergesheimer, one of the foremost living novelists, has taken humanity nt its dramatic tide in history—the height of the influx into California following the gold discovery. He has set his heroine into this scene of colorful human contrasts and let her work out her destiny of love.

"Flowers of Night," coming to the Palace Theatre, Tuesday and Wednesday, May 18 and 19, opens with Carlotay Villalon (Pola Negri) and her father, Don Giraldoy Villalon (Joseph Dowling) last of their great family, dining meagerly in their hacienda.

State Club Leader Visits County

A. G. Kettunen, State Boys' and Girls' Club Leader, and Mrs. Buckhart of the same department, judged the work completed by the County Clothing and Handicraft Clubs and selected the local champions at the achievement days held on April 27th and 28th.

These clubs were organized by county agent Mellencamp, with assistance from M. S. C., last fall in several of the rural schools of the county and instructed by their local teacher. During the winter these clubs have met every week or two weeks and have had some rousing good times, besides learning how to sew and how to make handy articles for the house and farm.

In order to complete the club project, each member of the clothing clubs had to make at least three articles of clothing, in addition to darning and patching, and in the case of the handicraft clubs, each member had to complete at least five articles. In addition each member had to keep an accurate report of the cost of materials used, as well as time spent and to write a story of their club work. Surely this is a real achievement and the members are to be congratulated in completing this valuable work as well as the teachers who so splendidly devoted their time and efforts toward instructing these young boys and girls.

At the completion of the project the local champions for each club were selected by Mr. Kettunen and Mrs. Buckhart. These local champions will now compete with each other for the honor of Charlevoix county champion, the lucky one will then compete for the state championship, which means so much. Also each member received an award called "Certificate of Achievement."

The following are the various clubs, members and leaders:

Clothing Clubs

1. Leader, Miss Mamie Peebles; Club, Bay Shore Jolly Sewers; Members, Doris Anderson, Local Champion; Edith Speigle, Reserve Champion; Viora Furguson, Dorothy Furguson, Dorothy Sky Engle.

2. Leader, Mis Thelma Crandall; Club, Boyne Falls; Members, Germaine Yell, Local Champion; Irene Golf; Reserve Champion; Bernice Jerramen, Martha Bauman, Irene McDonald, Francis Bauman.

3. Miss Vera Belding; Club, Clarion Eight Needles; Members, Dorothy Barkley, Local Champion; Geneva Geyer, Reserve Champion; Doren Banks, Oakhum Baumgardner, Vera Belding.

4. Leader, Miss Mildred Wangeman; Club Seven Merry Maidens; Members, Clara Leu, Local Champion; Katherine Wangeman; Reserve Champion; Dorothy Lem, Marie Johnston, Gertrude Looze.

Handicraft Clubs

5. Leader, Galo Chew; Club, Bay Shore Busy Bees Handicraft Club; Members, Millard Minier, Local Champion; George Sneathen, Leo Sneathen, Franklin Sneathen, Thomas Wightman.

6. W. C. Palmer; Club, Clarion Hammerfast Club; Members, Arthur Lloyd, Lester Stricker, James Griswold, Lowell Banks, Clifford Hankins, George Fine, Stanley Stricker, Donald Geyer, Billie Hankins, Dell Lloyd, Chas. Kleinhans, Lewis Kleinhans.

Local champion will be selected at a later date.

Ladies Clothing Project Progressing Splendidly

The ladies of the Charlevoix County Clothing Project are having their regular lessons under the leadership of Miss Margaret Harris of M. S. C., the one group of ladies meeting at Boyne City and the other at East Jordan.

The weather conditions made it necessary to make some changes in the schedule, but by next week the group at East Jordan will have had all the back work and the two groups will be on the same lesson.

Supremacy in Fine Steel

In the percentage of Costly Chrome Vanadium Steel used, Dodge Brothers Motor Car outranks any other automobile in the World, regardless of cost.

It is everywhere conceded that Chrome Vanadium Steel is the toughest and most enduring metal ever created for use in the vital parts of a motor car.

It may not be so well known, however, that Dodge Brothers Motor Car ranks first in the world in the use of this costly and fatigue-proof material.

Dodge Brothers power assembly is almost entirely Chrome Vanadium—motor, connecting rods, crankshaft, transmission, universal joint, drive shaft, differential and rear axle.

Even the front axle is Chrome Vanadium — the entire steering unit—and every leaf of the springs.

In fact, wherever any manufacturer uses alloy steels, Dodge Brothers use costly Chrome Vanadium. And in numerous instances Dodge Brothers employ it where plain carbon steel, even in the costliest cars, is commonly thought sufficient.

This has been true from the day Dodge Brothers built their first motor car.

This explains why the words Long Life, Safety and Dependability are habitually associated with the name Dodge Brothers wherever motor cars are serving mankind.

METHODIST CHURCH
C. E. Pollock, Minster

Next Sunday promises to be a special interest and value in church activities. The pastor will be the morning preacher at the regular hour of worship. The Junior church will also have its recognition at this time. At five o'clock in the afternoon there will be a union vesper service in the church, an outstanding feature of which will be a Prohibition Medal Declamation Contest, participated in by members of the various Sunday schools. The public is cordially invited to be present at both these hours of public service.

The Sunday School is doing excellent work this spring. Great plans are being made for Childrens Day, and the detailed announcement will be given in the near future.

The Epworth League will meet for their great Sunday evening hour next Sunday at six-thirty o'clock.

The ladies literary and sewing clubs meets with Mrs. George Trimble on Wood street, Thursday afternoon this week.

BAPTIST CHURCH

Edgar A. Guest says:

"Good friends are few;
Not many, if you lived a hundred years,
You would discover, who,
Through all life's care and hurt and grief and tears would stay by you."

We love to tell the story of one friend who will never leave nor forsake thee. We have no other story to tell, but we do try to tell about Him in such a way that the story will not become monotonous.

Two large audiences gathered with us last Sunday and helped to make it a day of profit and the occasion of happy fellowship. We extend a cordial invitation to all who are not worshiping elsewhere to meet with us for another such day May 16th. "The ethics of a strike" will be considered in the morning service. Our consideration will be mere theorizing while England is experiencing the real thing. For this we should devote time and study lest sometime we should have the experience.

We have yet to learn of a newspaper or prominent public man who is opposing Prohibition now, who made any great effort to secure prohibition before 1916. In a general way they were just as wet then as now. There is no doubt that Senator Ferris is right in his arraignment of the drys that when they secured the law they abandoned the teaching of the baneful effect of alcohol. Let the churches revive that instruction. It is just as poisonous now as it ever was, and is according to our wet friends—making more criminals—violators of law—now than ever before. We will talk about it Sunday evening.

Mrse. Eccleston of Petoskey, a former resident of Charlevoix will be buried from the Baptist church today (Wednesday).

An informal reception will be given to our members who have been away from the city and have returned, on Friday evening at the pastor's home, 102 East Hurlbut avenue. We are glad to have them home again.

Controlling Frost on Walls of Stable

Ventilating System Will Take Care of Moisture.

How to prevent the heavy accumulation of frost in stock barns during cold weather is a problem which often confronts farmers. Three things can be done to correct this condition, according to R. L. Patty, head of the Iowa agricultural engineering department at State college. One is to ventilate the building; another is to keep enough stock in the building so the temperature will be controlled, and a third is to insulate the walls and ceiling as thoroughly as possible.

"A ventilating system alone will prevent an extreme accumulation of moisture in the air and thereby help to control the frost deposits," he says. "It will not prevent the accumulation of a certain amount of frost without the other two factors mentioned above. Frost is not an indication of foul air unless the deposit is extreme. Air that is 100 per cent pure will frost under favorable conditions for it. By keeping the overhead space low and the building filled with the amount of stock intended for the space, the frost will not be bad if a proper ventilating system is provided."

The ventilating system must be put in exactly right, Patty states, if frost is to be controlled best. Insulating the walls and ceilings helps greatly in controlling frost. A dead-air space will insulate the walls and a layer of hay on the new floor above will insulate the ceiling and prevent a deposit of frost.

The practice of building low and insulating, Patty believes, is a good one when the building is ventilated. If no ventilation is provided, it is a dangerous one.

Proper Packing Is Big Factor in Ice Storage

Studies of icehouses throughout New Jersey by E. R. Gross, agricultural engineer at the college of agriculture, New Brunswick, have shown that when the ice is lost it is not always the fault of the house, and that proper packing is the most important factor in ice storage.

According to the engineer's report, two points must be observed; namely, proper amount of packing material, usually sawdust, and proper pack of the ice block itself.

A very simple frame building, roughly boarded up both inside and outside of studdings will keep ice when the ice is packed correctly with 12 to 18 inches of sawdust on all sides, top and bottom. Better construction is obtained, however, by double boarding both inside and outside of studdings, using paper between the boards. In this type of house, the top and the bottom of the walls must be made very tight to secure real dead air spaces in the walls. The shrinkage of ice in this house is much less than in one of simpler construction.

The ice cakes must fit closely together and all crevices should be filled with finely crushed ice or snow. Failure to fill these crevices tight starts air channels which can seldom be effectively stopped. Skimping in the amount of sawdust used and carelessly leaving cracks in the ice block are the causes of much loss of ice. Daily attention when the pack starts settling in the first warm weather of spring also is necessary.

Asparagus More Uniform When Set in the Spring

Asparagus roots are set in the spring rather than in the fall. Probably many of the roots would live if set in the fall, but the stand would be more uniform by spring setting. The usual distance is 4 by 2½ feet. The roots are set in furrows 8 to 10 inches deep, so that the crown is 6 inches below the surface of the ground. After setting, the roots are gradually covered by cultivation so that by fall of the first year they will be completely covered. For the first three years the plants are given ordinary cultivation between the rows with a hand hoe occasionally to keep out the weeds. In the fall the tops are thoroughly disked up and an application of manure is desirable. The cutting season would begin in the spring of the fourth year.

"A dollar saved is a dollar earned" applied to shoes

Next time you are tempted to save a dollar or two in the cost of shoes, remember that old proverb. Choose Walk-Overs, and never pay for money saved in price by grief in aching feet, and shoes that lose their shape. Walk-Overs are quality shoes. They are tailored. They fit. They are comfortable—and because they fit, they keep their style.

KEEP OFF GOLF COURSE UNTIL OFFICIALLY OPENED

Several of our local golf enthusiasts are in wrong; at least, they are bein blamed for the offense. The conse quence: Ordera have been given by James Gaskins, superintendent of the Chicago Golf grounds, that all golf playing ia atrictly forbidden until the courso ia officially opened.

For some years past local golfers have been allowed to play the course both prior to the official summer season and after the seaaon hnd been closed. Practically every golfer in the city have availed themselvea of this privilege. And the fellow appreciated it, too. Hardly a day passed when one could find players on the courae.

Now aomeone has tramped over the new seeding, kicked up the tender aod and raised hob in general. This was done Sunday. We do not believe it ls the work of the boys who play regular golf. They have moro common aense than to pull a bonehead deal like this. It has the ear-marks of thoughtless peoplo, irresponsible young fellows, who have absolutely no regard for other people'a property—probably it waa the snme person or persons who deliberately drove the auto over the greena last season.

But the damage has been done and Mr. Gaskins says there will ba no more playing golf until the grounds are opened for tho aummer season. And the fellows who appreciated tbo privilege are the ones who get the blame. What a lot of unappreciative fools there are in the world, anyway.

AUTO THIEVES CAPTURED HERE

TRIO TAKEN AFTER THRILLING CHASE FROM PETOSKEY

Quick Justice Resulted in Prison Sentoncos of From One to Five Years Each

Three young men were lodged in the Emmet county jall at Petoskey last Thursday after a thrilling chase and capture by Petoskey and Charlevoix officers here the same day.

The three, giving their names as Alex Supranowicz, Fred Zarnick and Cassimer Kobalski, and claiming Chicago as their home, were given free lodging in the Petoskey jail last Wednesday night, stating to the night police they had just arrived from Marquette, were broke and planned to start work Friday at the cement plant west of that city.

They were released Thursday morning and immediately went to the cement plant, where they raided and emptied several dinner pails, later taking an automobile belonging to Wesley Stickler and started south. Parties from the plant started in pursuit, overtaking them here, whera they had parked their car in front of Fessenden's drug store. Upon sighting their pursuers, who had then been joined by Charlevoix officers, the car thieves started out again, going up State street and around the corner of Garfield avenue where they abandoned their stolen car.

Zarnick was captured when he ran into a clothes lines in tho back yard at the Korth residence, upsetting himself. The other two were trailed down to the lake shore, and up past the cement plant, Kobalski being caught in the small woods near the Colon McKenzie home. Supranowicz was not apprehended until later, when he was located at the Phelps depot where he evidently was awaiting a freight train.

When brought before Judge Frank Shepard in Emmet county court last Friday, the trio plead guilty to the charge of larceny and each received a sentence of from one to five years, with a recommendation of three. The first two named were taken to Ionia and Zarnick, who has a prison record, was taken to Jackson.

Was Active in Church Activities and Affiliated With Organizations

The death of Mrs. S. A. Correll, which occurred at 10 o'clock Sunday evening, May 16, after a week'a illness, came as a surprise to her many friends, who had not realized her critical condition.

Mrs. Correll's maiden name was Isorn Card. She was born December 27, 1857, in Wayne township, Ashtabula county, Ohio. On December 21, 1876, she became the wife of Servetus A. Correll and the early years of their married life were spent in Warren, Ohio, where Mr. Correll practiced law. They were among the pioneer settlers of northern Michigan, living near Clarion in the vicinity of Walloon Lake, known in those days as Bear Lake.

Mrs. Correll was an active member of the Methodist church at Clarion, in those days a thriving lumber town on the G. R. & I. R. R.. She was choir leader, and Sunday school worker; a good friend and neighbor, always helpful in times of sickness and trouble, as well as a devoted wife, mother and homemaker.

About thirteen years ago the family moved to Charlevoix where Mrs. Correll continued her various activities until prevented by failing health, although she has always maintained her interest in the work in which she was formerly engaged.

Besides her husband, Mrs. Correll is survived by one brother, Orville Card, of Bronson, Michigan, and three children, Lee F. Correll of Lawrence, Long Island, Mrs. Harry Belding of Muskegon, Michigan, and Miss Nettie Correll of this city; also one grand child, Martha Isora Belding.

The funeral services were conducted from the family residence on Alice street at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, Dr. Herman Burns of the Baptist church officiating. The interment was at Greenwood cemetery, Petoskey.

STATE STREET LAND BRINGS HIGH FIGURE

Four Transactions Involve in Neighborhood of $10,000

Around $10,000 was involved in real estate transactions in State street property last week, several parcels of valuable land changing hands.

A. T. Jeffrey, local poultry dealer und owner of the Chic Chic farm, disposed of his 2 1-2 acres, house, chicken coops and parks, to Oscar Nelson of Detroit, who also purchased the 2 1-2 acres adjoining on the north from Wm. Heise, Sr., giving him 5 acres. Mr. Nelson will engage in the poultry business.

Mr. Jeffery then bought an acre from the holdings of Mrs. Louella Korth aouth of her residence, atarting work immediately on his buildings, which will include a modern six-room bungalow, garage, chicken coops and parks. Construction is going forward rapidly on the new buildings, which will be ready by the opening of the season, ao that no interruption in business will bo necessitated.

Mrs. J. T. Oldham also disposed of her State street property, Wm. Heise, Sr., and Charles Heise jointly buying the parcel, which is located between and adjoining their present holdinga.

This property movement is in line with the general trend of real estate netivities in and around Charlevoix this year, which indicates an ern of prosperity and increased valuntions for land owners.

Explore Your Own Middle West

Pleasure places, wonderful scenery and unusual sights are within a short distance of your home—wherever you may happen to live in the Middle West. This great, rich section of our country has been unexploited, but no part of the world offers more to see and do.

Leave dull care behind and start out tomorrow in your car to explore your own country. Time? It doesn't matter. A day, a week, or a whole summer—it will be packed with pleasure. Money? It's not important. Camp beneath the stars, stop at rustic lodges, put up at smart hotels—as you wish.

Look over this short list. Check the things you've seen, and those you'd like to:

1—Wyandotte Cave, Crawford County, Indiana, the second largest cavern in the country. Eleven levels and a passage-way thirteen miles long. Near Corydon on State Highway No. 16.

2—Redwood Falls, a magnificent spectacle, in Ramsey State Park, Minnesota. Itasca Park Highway and State Highway No. 14.

3—Starved Rock, visited by Marquette and Joliet in 1673, the scene of the last stand of the Illinois Indians. A few miles from Ottawa, Illinois. State Highway No. 7.

4—Gorge of the Mississippi in Wisconsin with castellated heights of weathered limestone bearing a fantastic resemblance to fortresses of old, State Highway No. 35.

5—Mark Twain State Park in Monroe County, Missouri, on beautiful bluffs overlooking Salt River, where Samuel Clemens was born. Near Paris, State Highways No. 10 and 15.

6—Hutchinson, Kansas—a center of the salt industry and an extensive strata of pure rock salt which is probably the largest in the world. Highways No. 59 and No. 32.

7—The Kildeer Mountains, the most beautiful of the scenic spots of North Dakota. Near the town of Kildeer on the Mandan-Kildeer and Denver-Esteven Highways.

8—Miles of shaded shoreline along the Lake in Michigan. State Highways No. 11 and No. 22.

9—Spearfish Canyon, with its sheer walls and tumbling waters, forty miles of exquisite beauty in South Dakota. Custer Battlefield Highway from Rapid City.

10—Effigy Indian mounds built in the shape of various animals. Several bird mounds that measure 150 feet from tip to tip of wing North of McGregor, Iowa, on State Highways No. 13 and No. 19.

These are mere suggestions. Isn't the list an incentive to find out what is near you?

Motoring in the Middle West is an unalloyed pleasure. There are fine roads wherever you go—and Red Crown Gasoline all along the way.

Fill your tank with Red Crown Gasoline, get a good road map, and start out tomorrow. Rediscover your own Middle West.

"Nobody from the Royal James assisted them," said Murray. "You have my word for that. I cannot say as much for your own ship, although they told me when they discovered themselves to me, several days after our sailing, that they had acted alone."

"Alone or not, where's my two men?" blustered Flint. "Good hands don't grow on trees."

"No; aboard the Walrus they stab one another to death," agreed my great-uncle. "Come, come, you have no proof in support of your charge."

"Well, two broke free and two died," insisted Flint. "And if the two who broke free were not the means—"

"What proof have you of it?"

"Proof?"

"Aye, proof, I said. Their bodies, what of them?"

"Why, we never—"

My great-uncle shrugged his shoulders.

"You see? You have been talking loosely, I fear, my friend."

Flint's fingers twitched on his hanger-hilt.

"I tell ye, Murray, there's a foul smell about this whole business. You were all for giving me hostages—'twas no idea of mine. And then they no sooner come aboard my ship than they're away again. I like it not. Here's trickery or ye may gut me for a preacher."

"Had I found your hostages on the James before sailing or within a day after, you should have had them back again," said Murray firmly. "But there is no point to this argument; for hostages or no hostages, you see me returned with the treasure, as I promised."

"Ye must ha' had rare success," Flint admitted unwillingly. "We ha' the gold o' the Indies, here!"

He looked up and happened to meet the awe-struck gaze of Moira O'Donnell. A sneer curled his lips.

"But ye carry passengers, I see," he insinuated. "Gold and women! 'Tis a fine combination, Murray, but there's a rule in our Articles you were all for establishing. Number Four, eh? It sticks in my crop, for ye called it once on me.

"'And that there may be less occasion for broils amongst our company, we do further decree that gaming may be prohibited at any time when in the captain's judgment it becomes dangerous to our harmony, as likewise, that at no time and under no circumstances may women be taken and kept as spoil aboard our vessels or any vessel upon which our company may chance to fare.'

"What d'ye say to that? What of Rule Four now?"

My great-uncle took snuff.

"This lady," he said, with the slightest emphasis, "is the daughter of my friend here, Colonel O'Donnell, a gentleman who represents in our venture the group of my friends who made it possible for me to intercept the treasure ship."

O'Donnell, whose face had been growing redder and redder throughout this conversation, plucked his daughter by the elbow and led her away.

"Colonel O'Donnell and his daughter are my guests," my great-uncle continued. "They have played essential parts in our capture of the treasure. I must insist, Flint, that you accord them a courtesy similar to that which I should extend to friends of yours in a like situation."

"They're no friends o' mine," growled Flint. "This is more o' your cursed political blethering. Well, I'm sick o' it, Murray, and I care not who knows it. First, ye carry us north to America, just to crimp two men, with not two hundred pounds in booty to show for the voyage. Next, ye shut me up here for the better part of six months for my men to rot with fever and drink and my ship to foul her bottom—"

"On both these counts you have your own negligence to blame," put in my great-uncle.

"——and last," Flint fumed on without heeding him, "ye bring to the Rendezvous a man and a woman who are not of our company, and who, for all ye know, may go hence and loose a king's ship on us some day when we are careened and helpless."

"Not you," returned Murray sarcastically. "You'll not careen, Flint. That would mean work for your crew. But you concern yourself needlessly. Colonel O'Donnell has reasons for keeping his share in our enterprise under cover. He is more safely to be trusted in the circumstances than many another."

"I care not who he is or what you may have on him," cried Flint, working himself into a fury. "Ye ha' introduced four strangers into our midst without the let or permission of others of our company."

"I do not recognize the right of any other to tell me what I shall or shall not do," replied my great-uncle haughtily. "Such as it is, this company is the creation of my efforts, and I venture the assertion, Captain Flint, that it will not long survive my leadership. The four strangers of whom you complain have been essential factors in enabling me to win the treasure before you—which now awaits your convenience for division, according to the terms which I originally stipulated."

If Murray's last words were intended to stimulate Flint's cupidity anew they succeeded. "How—how much?" he asked, almost fearfully.

"Seven hundred and sixty-three thousand, nine hundred and ninety-five pounds in coin and bullion, without counting a chest of jewels and three chests of plate," replied my great-uncle promptly. "You will note that I have favored our people in the division, allotting to them all in excess of the million and a half pounds the Santissimo Trinidad was expected to carry."

A cunning look crept into Flint's face.

"Where's the rest?" he croaked.

My great-uncle took snuff.

"Quite safely disposed of, I assure you," he answered.

"Down below?"

"No, 'tis no longer aboard."

Flint swallowed hard.

"Ye mean it ain't here? It ain't aboard the James?"

"Precisely, captain."

"Gut me!" roared Flint. "Ye divided it by your lone? Wi'out a man from the Walrus to stand by and see fair play? I'll not support it, Murray. Curse me if I will! I know your tricks! May I be —— —— for a —— —— —— if any lousy swab of a sea-lawyer politician is a-goin' to cast dust in my eyes. 'Twould be the very thing you'd do, Murray, to attempt to cozen me into believing seven hundred thousand pounds had been set aside for your friends by throwing in an extra hundred thousand pounds for our division. 'Friends!' By thunder, the only friend ye know is yourself, ye dried-up wisp of a—"

"That will do," said my great-uncle in his still, level voice.

Flint opened and shut his mouth rapidly without a sound issuing forth.

"I bar personalities, captain," warned my redoubtable relative.

One hand barely touched his sword-hilt.

"I trust there will be no occasion for me to repeat the warning," he remarked.

Flint's baffled rage was comic to behold.

"Aye, you and your fine gentleman ways!" he choked. "I know ye! Gut me if I'll support it to be swindled thus. A woman and strangers aboard! And eight hundred thousand pounds missing! 'Safely disposed of,' says you! I'll warrant. Safe where you can collar it any time you please. I knowed it as soon as I marked the flutter of a petticoat. A woman and gold—"

Long John Silver swung himself up on to the poop from the head of the port ladder and stamped toward us.

"I hopes as how ye'll overlook my boldness, Cap'n Murray, but I ha' a word to speak to Cap'n Flint—fo'csle council, sir."

My great-uncle took another pinch of snuff.

"Ah, yes," he observed dryly. "I recall that aboard the Walrus the fo'csle council must be heard. I trust that you can instil some common sense into your captain's head. He hath need of it, Silver."

Flint glared, but Silver snatched whatever reply he intended out of his mouth.

"Thank 'ee, sir. You just let me an' Cap'n Flint ha' a word in private, and maybe we'll see a way out o' this tangle."

"Suit yourself," said my great-uncle with a shrug.

Silver pulled his forelock, and his large face lighted up as if a considerable favor had been conferred.

"We won't be no time at all, sir. Thank 'ee kindly."

He put his free hand under Flint's elbow, and I marveled to see the ease with which he was able to bend his captain to his will. Accustomed as I was to Murray's aristocratic discipline, it was a revelation to establish contact again with the free-and-easy spirit of the Walrus, where any man might become commander if he was able to muster a majority of the fo'csle to raise cutlasses in his behalf. Flint obediently followed his quartermaster to the starb'd side of the poop, and there they laid their heads close and colloqued for a quarter-glass, Silver at first arguing and Flint resisting him.

"Silver is no man to let hard on four hundred thousands pounds slip through his hands," I said.

"Aud maybe he says not to let eight hundred thousand pounds get away, needer," commented Peter. "Ja, I t'ink so."

Murray nodded slowly.

"You are more like to be right than wrong, friend Peter. Of all the Walrus' people he hath the most acute intelligence. A choice knave!"

Colonel O'Donnell stalked back to us from the extremity of the stern with Moira on his arm.

"Did ye put a flea in the rascal's ear, Murray?" he demanded. "By the Mass, I never thought to hear ye tolerate such impudence on your own deck."

"I am no man for quarreling without an adequate end in sight," returned my great-uncle. "Never threaten unless you must, chevalier, and then smite with a sure aim."

"Words!" grumbled the Irishman. "'Tis time we had a little action."

Moira disengaged herself from her father and came to stand betwixt Peter and me.

"See, Bob! There's the red-headed boy will be making signals to you from the larboard ladder."

Darby McGraw's flaming top-knot projected just far enough above the level of the deck to show his eyes and a hand that jerked mysteriously at me.

"Come up, Darby," I invited him.

But he shook his head vigorously, so I crossed to his side.

"What is ailing you?" I asked.

"Sorra a trouble in the whole of creation," he returned in his rich brogue. "But I'd walk my two feet over the galley-stove as soon as stand so near the old devil as yourself, Master Bob."

"He's no more to be feared than Flint," I answered, laughing.

"Ah, there's little ye know to be saying a thing the like of that!" exclaimed Darby. "With Flint 'tis a blow and a curse and 'take it or leave it!' But him! He'd put the evil eye on the lot of us if the notion but came into the head of him."

"I'd rather be his friend than his enemy," I admitted. "Do they fear him so aboard the Walrus?"

Darby squinted sideways at me.

"Whiles they fear him. And then again when the rum is flowing— But I'll be saying what maybe I'll be sorry for later. I see ye found the elegant young maid that went to the Whale's Head with ye. My faith, ain't she the pretty creature! Will she be a pirate, too?"

"No more than Peter and me."

"Do ye tell me that same! And ye took her along with the treasure, the lads do be saying below. That was the grand haul! But they say, too, a good half of it ye hurled on that island Long John do be always singing about."

"So you have heard that!" I cried.

"Troth, yes. They was telling Long John and me before he come up to speak with Cap'n Flint. God save us, who'd think there was so much money in the world? But here come John and the cap'n now. I'd better be skippin'."

"But Here Come John and the Cap'n Now. I'd Better Be Skippin'."

He slid down the ladder as he spoke, and I rejoined the group about my great-uncle. Flint strode across the deck, his face like a thunder-cloud. Silver, at his elbow, exhibited a countenance wreathed in smiles.

"We'll divide what's below," said Flint abruptly.

"I rejoice that you have come to your senses," replied Murray.

Silver spoke up.

"He's a main jealous cap'n, Cap'n Flint is, sir. Allus has a lookout for the interests o' his crew. A kind o' gardeen for us, ye might say. But we're all mighty beholden to yourself for counting in the Walrus same as the James; and speaking on behalf o' the Walrus, I make bold to say as we won't forget it, Cap'n Murray, sir."

My great-uncle listened to this with the shadow of a smile on his face.

"I thank you, Silver," he acknowledged blandly. "I was confident you would appreciate the situation. Will you divide at once, Flint?"

Flint growled in his throat, then mastered his temper by a substantial effort.

"We'll appoint the usual committee o' six to check over with your men, Murray," he rasped. "I'll send my boats to shift our portion."

And he turned on his heel. John Silver stumped off to the ladder and hopped lightly down to the maindeck after his commander.

CHAPTER XIII

The candles burned with a steady spear-shaped flame, undeviating, motionless, so that the shadows were cast upon the panelling of the cabin walls in solid blocks like streaks of a darker coloring in the polished woodwork. The air was so still that we could hear the sea-birds calling down the inlet, the seethe and suck of water about the rudder, the splash of a fish, the patter of the feet of the watch.

My great-uncle, for want of other diversion, had undertaken to teach Peter to play chess, with some saturnine advice and comment from the Irishman; and to my amusement—as likewise to Murray's, I must admit—Peter proved himself a most redoubtable tyro, and once he had been coached in the rudiments presented a shrewd defensive gambit.

"Check at last!" exclaimed my relative, sinking back in his chair—of the four of us, he alone wore coat and stock and still contrived to maintain an air of cool well-being in that humid atmosphere. "You pushed me, Peter. Stap me, but you did! I'd not like to match my game with yours six months from now. Had you developed your queen's knight eight moves back— But 'tis futile to argue concerning what might have been. As well seek to prognosticate the future of our own lives."

Peter giggled and muttered that he was "no good, neen."

"I would we might say, 'Check!' in this weary coil we are caught in," grumbled O'Donnell. "I see not that we are any farther forward with your confederates yonder."

He waved his hand out of the stern-window.

"They carried away their four hundred thousand pounds, but every man of them was as glum in the face as though 'twas so many bodkins instead of a prince's ransom. St. Patrick! When I think of what four hundred thousand pounds would do with the English parliament men that will be selling their souls to whoever bids them the highest!"

HALL RESIDENCE IS DESTROYED BY FIRE

Few Belongings Saved From Early Morning Blaze.

Fire of undetermined origin completely destroyed the home of Mrs. Pearl Hall, near the four corners on the Norwnod Road, Tuesday morning at about two o'eloek.

No one was in the house at the time the fire was discovered, Mra. Hall and child staying at the home of her mother nearby, although a woman had been doing house eleaning work there during the day.

The alarm was turned in by neighbors, but the building was too far gone by the time the fire department was notified, to be saved. A small amount of furniture was saved from the front rooms. We understand the home was covered by insurance.

THE DAIRY

GREEN FEEDS FOR DAIRY-COW RATION

Green rye and green cowpeas may be fed to dairy cows lnmediately after milking without unfavorably affecting either the flavor or odor of the milk. This fact wns developed by a series of feeding experiments carried on by the Fnited States Departuent of Agriculture to determine whether feeding green rye or green cowpeas affects the flavor and odor of milk, and to nscertain how these fe ds tay be fed and the milk handled so as to minimize any objectionable effects on the quality of the product.

The investigation relative to the feeding of green rye was conducted with ten Holstein and ten Jersey cows representative of their respective breeds, and giving milk relatively free from abnormal flavors and odors. The average weight of the Jersey cows was 976 pounds, and that of the Holsteins 1,271 pounds. The stage of lactation varied from fresh cows to those nearing the end of their lactation period.

The cutting of the rye used in the experiments was begun when it was about 15 inches in height, before it had headed. In addition to the green rye, the cows were fed, in proportion to their milk production, varying quantities of a grain mixture containing two pounds each of hominy feed, bran, and oats, and one pound each of cottonseed meal and linseed meal. In addition to the grain mixture, the cows were fed as much alfalfa hay as they would readily consume, the average quantity of hay consumed daily per cow being 12.3 pounds.

The cows were separated into groups of five. One group received only the hay and grain ration and were known as checks. The other three groups received, respectively, in addition to the hay and grain ration, the following quantities of green rye:

15 pounds one hour before milking.
30 pounds one hour before milking.
30 pounds immediately after milking.

This plan of feeding was followed for four consecutive days, but on the fifth day the rye was omitted from the ration. The cows were then interchanged in order to equalize any abnormal results caused by the milk of an individual animal, and the feeding of green rye was resumed.

Samples were taken from the milk of each cow at the time of milking, and cooled, but not aerated. The samples were examined for flavor and odor by experienced judges, who had no knowledge as to which cow produced a particular sample.

These exhaustive experiments disclosed the fact that as much as 30 pounds of green rye may be fed to dairy cows immediately after milking without producing noticeable effect on either the flavor or odor of the milk.

In similar feeding experiments with green cowpeas, 30 pounds of this feed was consumed by dairy cows immediately after milking without producing any pronounced objectionable flavor or odor in the milk. Green cowpeas tend to affect more unfavorably the flavor and odor of the milk than does green rye.

Cow's Individuality Limits Amount of Feed

Wheat hna about the same value as corn aa a dairy feed, while oats has a value nf 10 per cent less than corn pound for pound. The amount of feed which should be fed a cow depends in the first place upon individuality. Size of the animal, amount of milk produced and butter-fat content of the milk also bear important relationships to the amount of feed necessary. A grain mixture should be fed in the proportion of one pound to each three pints of milk produced daily by the cow. If the cow produces more than five gallons of milk a day, however, feed at the rate of one pound of grain mixture to each four pints of milk. Under most circumstances feed all the roughage she will eat up clean. Only if she tends to become overfat should the quantity of roughage be restricted. Feed all she will respond to in milk production. When she begins to put on flesh cut down the grain.

M. E. CHURCH AT EAST JORDAN BURNS

Fire Had Gained Considerable Headway Before Discovery

East Jordan's First M. E. church was destroyed by fire of undetermined origin Friday afternoon, May 14. The blaze was not discovered until it had gained considerable headway, and seemed to be in the upper part of the structure. When finally the fire department was called, the entire upper portion of the building was a mass of flame.

With the fire in the top of the structure it enabled those first on the scene to remove considerable of the church furniture, including the pews, piano, etc.

Fortunately very little wind was blowing and the parsonage and other residences closely adjoining the church escaped injury.

The church building had undergone extensive repairs in the past few years, and, while n nominal insurance was carried, the loss is bound to be heavy.

WHAT SHALL WE DO?

What are you going to do after you graduate? This is the question which every young man and young woman is asked as the commencement season approaches. This is an important question. The attempt to help young people to solve it, has called into existence many vocational schools, industrial schools and short cuts to a business education and n business career. Much is being said about the time lost in making up one's mind as to life work. If only each young man or young woman knew exactly what he or she wanted to do, or is best fitted to do, how much time could be saved! We heard recently, the story of several boys, all graduates of Ithaca high school, all of whom are now engaged in widely vary occupations, demanding a diversity of talent, and all of whom are succeeding in their life work, who chose this work on the advice of. an expert, who, after studying their individual cases, advised each as to what work he was best fitted to engage in, and in several instances, this was something far different than he had planned. They are now all finding this expert advice good.

Another young man had begun selling life insurance. He wns successful, but was not convinced that he was enthusiastic enough about his work. He consulted this same expert who advised him to throw up his insurance job, buy a saw nnd hammer and go to work as a carpenter in Detroit, buy some land, build a house, sell it, and thus become a real builder of his own fortune. This he did and is now on the high road to success and fully convinced that he has made no mistake.

The time may come when expert advice in the choice of a life work will be sought as the ndvice of a doctor or lawyer is now sought along their particular line, but up to date, there are very few experts whose advice is worth a farthing. Then what shall the boys nnd girls who have to make a living in the highly specialized age do?

Sometimes the college graduate who has not specialized along the line of law, medicine, theology, engineering or soma other profession, blames his father or teacher for not helping him to make choice and early direct his energies toward preparation for his life work. There are those whom nature seems to have especially fitted for some profession, occupation or business. To advise such a one against his strong, nntural bent, would be a crime. But observations leads us to think that the vast majority have no such strong natural tendency. Study of the requirements, advice of those having experience, may help, but often environment and opportunity have more to do with the choice of life work than either strong natural bent or expert advice. Not everyone can be great and distinguished, but the broadest possible culture, plus energy, determination and keeping everlasting at it coupled with high ideals will give any one success. These are the elements of which good citizens are made.

THE LITTLE PEDESTRIANS

Many rules have been given to drivers for the protection of children; and goodness knows, they need them. Here are some for parents, from a traffic expert:

Don't let your children play in the street.

Don't let them walk in the street.

Don't let them cross a street in any other place than an intersection.

Don't let them run across a street; make them walk.

Don't let them play near congested streets or intersections.

These rules are more easily given than enforced. Children are naturally heedless, and they make a peculiarly difficult traffic problem because a driver never can tell what they will do. But while conscientious drivers are doing their best to look out for sudden irruption of children across his path, parents, surely can do no less than try to hammer these elementary rules of caution into the children's minds. Repetition eventually will succeed, and carefulness become habitual.

CONDITION OF MICHIGAN CROPS

WHEAT ACREAGE FAR BELOW GENERAL AVERAGE

Cold Backward Spring and Winter Killing of Crops Reduces Estimated 1926 Production

Michigan's wheat crop promises to be even less in amount than the light production of 1925. According to the May 1 report issued by L. Whitney Watkins, commissioner of agriculture and Verne H. Church, agricultural statisticinn, U. S. Bureau of agricultural encnomics, the present condition of 75 per cent with nverage weather conditions up to harvest time would result in a production of 12,495,000 bushels as compared with 13,906,000 the final estimate for 1925, and 20,040,000 in 1924. Of the 905,000 acres planted, it is estimated that eight per cent will be abandoned and the ground utilized for other crops. This leaves 833,000 acres for harvest as compared with 818,000 last year. Much of the acreage was sown late and made but little growth last fall, and this has been more or less killed in spots, especially on flat, heavy lands in the southern half of the lower peninsula. In the east-central counties and in local areas elsewhere the damage was severe, whole fields being practically destroyed and the percentage of abandonment increased to 20 per cent or more in those section. On the up-lands, the loss is slight and mainly confined to occasional low-spots, and many fields nre showing good stands. Very little damage occurred in the northern half of the state as the ground was covered with snow nearly up to the 1st of May.

As rye is chiefly confined to the medium and light soils, the damage to the crop is less than to wheat. The condition was reported at 83 per cent, a gain of two per cent over April 1. One year ago, the condition was 88 per cent and the ten-year average is 90 per cent for May 1. The present outlook indicates a crop of 2,413,000 bushels on the 184,000 acres planted last fall as compared with 2,700,000 bushels harvested from 216,000 acres in 1925. While the growth to date was less than usual, the fields are showing good color and favorable weather will largely overcome this handicap.

The nation's crop is estimated at 44,791,000 bushels against 48,695,000 in 1925. The condition averages 81.5 per cent and the acreage for harvest amounts to 3,565,000. The acreage harvested last year was 4,088,000.

The stocks of old hay on farms are the smallest in many years. Last year's crop was about 20 per cent less than normal and the winter feeding period was longer than usual, resulting in completely using up the production on many farms. Many who have been forced to buy have had difficulty in securing a supply in their own localities. The estimated amount on farms is eight per cent, or a tntal of 240,000 tons. One year ago, 20 per cent of the 1924 crop remained on hand. The condition of meadows is placed at 78 per cent as compared with a ten-year average of 88 per cent. Some of the new seedings were destroyed by dry weather last summer, and there has been considerable heaving and winter-killing of clover and alfalfa.

No spring plowing could be done before about April 20 and unfavorable weather greatly reduced the amount of ground plowed last fall in cnmparison with other years. As a result, the total amount reported on Mny 7 was only 30 per cent, last year and 48 per cent, the ten-yenr avernge. Only 20 per cent nf spring sowing nnd planting had been accomplished as compnred with an avernge of 33 per cent for the last ten years and 48 per cent one year nco.

Pasture: Growth was slow in starting, in fact made no progress whatever until the closing days of April, hence the low condition figure of 54 per cent of normal. One year ago it was 82 per cent and the ten-year average for May 1 is 76 per cent. The average condition for the United States is 74.6 per cent.

Miss Liviogston's Gowns Stuoning io "Hell's Four Hundred"

Margaret Livingston, who is starred in Fox Films production, "Hell's Four Hundred," which will show at the Palace theatre Friday, May 21, wears as a wedding suit a three-piece outfit made of soft grey duvetyne trimmed in very wide grey fox fur. The ensemble is made very straight and rather tight fitting, with a full loose cape edge in fox fur and scarf collar completing the costume. With the Miss Livingston wears a very close fitting grey felt hat with a large ornament in front.

"A Kiss for Cinderella" Opeos Saturday at Palace

Of the varied assortment of film fare that is to be served up to local moviegoers during the coming week, none holds out greater promise of genuine entertainment than Paramount's "A Kiss for Cinderalla," which opens at the Palace Theatre, Saturday and Sunday, May 22-23.

This production brings together again the personalities that sky-rocketed "Peter Pan" to such a sensational success. Here, again, we have the light, delicately wrought fantasy and whimsical humor of James M. Barrie, the expert direction and distinctive craftsmanship of Herbert Brenon and the elfin charm and sensitive acting of Betty Bronson.

Liner is Blown Up As Film Thriller

An ocean liner actually blown to atoms, a live leopard escnping from his cage aboard the ship and driving panic-stricken passengers from the life-boats, a fight between Lloyd Hughes and the leopold—these are some of the spectacular thrills that will be shown on the screen at the Pnlace Theatre when First National's feature picture, "The Half Way Girl," is shown there next Tuesday and Wednesday, May 25-26.

Feeding Buttermilk to Hogs for Best Results

A safe rule to apply in the feeding of buttermilk to any kind of hogs and one that will almost invariably give good results is to feed the buttermilk at the rate of three pounds of buttermilk to each one pound of grain the pigs consume. This will apply equally with brood sows, young pigs and fattening pigs.

A brood sow, for instance, normally would require somewhere between a pound and a half and two pounds of grain per 100 pounds live weight per day. That is, a sow weighing 400 pounds would need between seven and eight pounds of grain per day if she were being fed grain only. It will take about five pounds of buttermilk to replace one pound of grain, so that in feeding buttermilk to these sows you can feed to best advantage about eighteen to twenty pounds of buttermilk or 2½ gallons per day, and could then reduce the grain feed to not more than five pounds.

NERVES ALL UNSTRUNG?

Charlevoix Folks Should Find the Cause aod Correct It.

Are you all worn out? Feel tired, nervous, half-sick? Do you have a constant backache; sharp twinges of pain, too, with dizzy spells and annoying urinary disorders? Then there's cause for worry and more cause to give your weakened kidneys prompt help. Use Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys.

Charlevoix folks recommend Doan's for just such troubles.

Mrs. Frank Coatta, Jr., 108 Robinson St., Charlevoix, says: "I had a dull ache through the small of my back and when I moved quickly, nr stooped, sharp pains like the thrust of a knife darted across my kidneys. I became nervous and irritnble and was in a run down condition. My kidneys were weak and acted too freely. Several boxes of Doan's Pills, from Metcalfs' Drug store, cured me."

DICKINSON OUT AGAIN FOR LIEUT. GOVERNOR

Will Be Official Standard Bearer of Drys—Urged to Make Race

In a short formal statement Hon. Luren D. Dickinson, announced his candidacy for a fourth term as lieutenant governor. He will be the official standard bearer of the drys.

Dickinson was defeated for a fourth term in 1924 by Lieutenant Governor George W. Welsh. He served as presiding officer of the Senate from 1915 to 1920. No other lieutenant governor has been in office more than two terms.

Dickinson's statement intimates the drys are dissatisfied with the present administration and have urged him to run as the only available candidate.

"During the past two weeks, I have been in attendance at a big five-day dry convention in Detroit," the statement said, "as well as in various parts of the state. During this time, I have been called into several conferences and urged to be a candidate again for lieutenant governor, being tendered the strongest support in the same length of time by those who have always been friends and a surprisingly large number of new ones, than I ever had for my office.

"Well defined reasons were given, among them that I would have been overwhelmingly nominated two years ago but for a split in the dry vote which this year, they say, is solidly back of me.

"While I have been continuously urged for months by individuals to make the race, I have given no encouragement. But after analyzing this fresh movement and causes therefore, I stated that if I am their outstanding choice I will make the race but if another equally available can be found, I will willingly step aside."

MAY POSTPONE BASS SEASON

Local Fishermen Much Concerned Over a Rumored Ruling

Local fishermen are intensely interested in the proposal of director John Baird of the department of conservation to postpone the opening of the bass season 15 days.

Under the general fish law, the bass season opens June 15 in the lower peninsula, and July 1 in upper Michigan. Director Baird is considering making the dates July 1 and July 15 respectively, on account of the cold spring weather delaying the spawning.

The sportsmen's clubs of the state have been asked their opinion, and if those organizations are favorable, the seven commissioners will hold a special meeting to act on the matter. Twenty days must elapse after the action of the commission, before the order takes effect, and the commission is therefore expected to pass on the proposal before May 25th.

A petition is also being circulated throughout the county and in this city to change the length limit on bass, which is now 12 inches, back to 10 inches as formerly. Anyone who has ever caught one knows that a 12-inch bass will weigh from 2 1-2 to 3 pounds, which in our notion is quite a fish. If the conservation department will only make less laws, and confine themselves to those needed, preservation of our wild life and fish would gain by leaps and bounds.

BAPTIST CHURCH

Preparations are being made for Children's Day, to be held June 13th. That day we all become as little children and with flowers and song and exercise try to enjoy a faith as simple as the child's faith in earthly parents.

The Baptist people are planning to do their part in entertaining the hosts of tourists whom we expect and who are planning to spend the coming summer in this vicinity, and at the same time maintain the regular services of the church. We believe this can be done without sacrificing the necessary income or the dignity of the church. It is well to establish the habit at once, and sustain it with determined resolution. Begin next Sunday.

We were greeted with a congregation that well filled the house last Sunday evening, and hope to have a still larger one next Sunday. It was worth the effort just to hear brother Kirby's solo. He will sing Sunday morning and evening.

All persons not otherwise engaged are given a cordial invitation to worship with us at all our services.

The profound sympathy of the entire congregation goes out to the the Correll family in their bereavement. For nearly two years Mrs. Correll has been an attendant with us when she was able to do so, and we will greatly miss her. To have had such a mother is in itself a great heritage.

Card of Thanks

We wish to express our sincere thanks to all our friends and the K. of P. lodge, who so generously extended their sympathy through kind words and beautiful floral offerings, during the hour of our sorrow by the loss of a wife and mother. Especially we thank Rev. Burns for his comforting words and Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Usher for their invaluable help. Guy C. Eccleston and little sons, Floyd and Billie.—Adv. 20t1.

MAYOR FRED GREEN ENTERS PRIMARY RACE

Ionia Executive Announces Candidacy for Governorship

Hon. Fred W. Green, for fourteen years mayor of Ionia made formal announcement of his candidacy for the Republican nomination for governor at the September primaries. The announcement, which has been expected for some time in view of the trend of public affairs in Michigan, was greeted by a tremendous ovation from the people of his home county who, without regards to party affiliations, were in Ionia by the thousands to take part in "Fred W. Green Day," staged by the citizens of Ionia county as a testimonial to his worth as a fellow citizen.

Added to this throng were hundreds of prominent men from every part of the state who journeyed to Ionia to assure Mayor Green of their support throughout what is expected to be the grentest primary fight in the history of Michigan.

In announcing his candidacy Mayor Green made it evident that he is not going to enter upon a campaign of vilification, but that his platform is to be one of a constructive nature, conducted as a gentleman and mindful of the position he has always held in the hearts of the people of this state.

WILL DETERMINE WHO IS LIABLE

U. S. Claims Court to Fix Responsibility in Harbor Case.

A Washington dispatch says the United States court of claims will determine whether the village of Harbor Springs is jointly responsible with the United States government for the death of Ernest H. Haines, weather bureau inspector, who was electrocuted in 1922, while working on the weather signal station there. This was decided Friday when the house committee on claims referred the matter to the court of claims.

Ella K. Haines, widow of the deceased inspector, obtained a judgment against the village for $25,000 and the village in turn sought to prove that the United States was jointly liable for the death and to collect half of the amount of the judgment from the government. The village alleged joint responsibility on the grounds that the wenther signal station was mnintained by the government on the property of the viliage.

Representative Frank D. Scott, Alpena, took an active interest in the case, introducing a special bill early this session for the relief of Harbor Springs.

MAY MEETING WAS LARGELY ATTENDED

Thirteen Members Result From Membership Campaign

There was a large attendance at the May meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, held last Friday afternoon at Mrs. McMillan's.

Thirteen new members were reported as a result of the membership campaign. A proposed amendment to the constitution was read, which, if passed, will change the time of electing officers from December to October, the officers elect to submit their plan of work and begin their term of office at the close of the December meeting.

The social department was authorized to arrange for the planting of memorial trees. A special Independence Day committee was appointed, with Mrs. Alcox as chairman.

Mrs. Harsha's presentation of the topic, "Better Homes," was much appreciated.

The June meeting is scheduled for the Baptist church, with Mrs. Nordrum as leader. Topic, "Community Housekeeping."

PIECE OF STEEL CAUSES LOSS OF EYE

Clarence LaPeer Injured While at Work With Bridge Gang.

Wurd comes from Mendon, Michigan, relating the details of an unfortunate accident which caused the loss of the right eye of Clarence LaPeer, a former well known resident of Charlevoix. Mr. LaPeer and family left Charlevoix some ten or twelve year ago, going first to Wisconsin and later returning to Michigan. The article telling of the accident follows:

"Clarence LaPeer of this place, who works with the bridge gang of the Pennsylvania railroad, met with a very serious accident last Thursday, while working near Grand Rapids. A piece of steel flying from a hammer struck him in the pupil of the right eye with such force that it penetrated deeply and practically destroyed the eye. He was taken to Butterworth hospital, Grand Rapids, and the eye was removed on Friday. Mr. LaPeer is at home and recovering nicely from the effects of the accident."

AUTO CAMP TO OPEN JUNE 1ST

HEAVY TOURIST TRAFFIC LOOKED FOR THIS SEASON

Many Needed Improvement Will Add Greatly to Convenience of Auto Park

On Tuesday, Juae 1, Chnrlevoix's Auto camp will officiallq open for the summer season of 1926, and is in readiness for the large number of tourists who will visit Charlevoix and northern Michigan this summer.

Many improvements hnve been completed since the camp closed its successful season last fall, one of the most needed of which has been the complete remodeling of the septic tank and sewage system.

Space for between twenty and thirty more cars has been provided by clearing out the trees and undergrowth in the west end of the park, where the ground has been leveled off and road-ways built to make it easily accessible to automobiles. The line fence between Boulder Park and the camp has been built and the ravine which cut through the parking grounds hns been filled in nnd smoothed over.

Another needed improvement which will add considerably to the convenience of the park is the new one-story combination washroom and office which is now under construction near the west end of the grounds. The front pnrt of the building, which is a frame structure 12x18, will be devoted to the caretaker's office, providing a place for registration of campers, thus dispensing with the need of going from one party to another to do this work. They can now come to the office, register and go about their business and avoid former confusion and delay. The renr of the building will be used as a washroom, where campers may do small washings. It will be equipped with modern appliances for this purpose and add much to the convenience of the camp.

Charlevoix's auto camp is famed fnr and near for its beautiful location, excellent accommodations and service. Without boasting in the least, we can say that you will travel many mile and not find its equal. Manager Hugh Brady will be in charge of the camp thia season as in former years.

LEGISLATURE RAISES TAX EXEMPTION

On Estate of Soldiers and Sailors—Law of 1925

An amendment to the tax law of 1925 raises the limit of exemption from taxation on homesteads of soldiers' und sailors' wives and widows from $1000 to $2000.

Heretofore such persons who were the owners of taxable property thac is worth more than $3000 were not entitled to any exemption, hut this limit has been raised to $5000.

Persons desiring such exemption are required to file with assessing oficers affidavits showing the facts which entitle them to it. Without such affidavits the assessors are not authorized to allow the exemption. The state pays the city the taxes on amounts properly exempted, hut unless affidavits are filed no authority for the exemption exists, except on the general ground of the inability of the person to pay taxes. In such cases the state does not reinhurse the city for taxes on exempted property.

PLANS SET FOR MEMORIAL DAY

PARADE TO START AT NINE O'CLOCK SHARP

Splendid Program Prepared for Exercises at Cemetery—Large Attendance is Urged

Memorial Day falls this year on Suaday, but will he observed nationnlly on Monday, May 31st. Plnns are all laid for the exercises at the cemetery and it is hoped that all able to be there will attend.

The parade will form at the corner of Briage street and park avenue at 9:30 sharp, with Dr. F. H. Wilkinson as officer of the day. Led by the city band, they will then march down Bridge street to the corner of Bridge and Antrim, where a pause will be made while a brief ceremony in memory of those who lost their lives at sea is given, after which the parade will proceed to the cemetery, where the principal memorial services will be held. Following is the program:

Invocation, Rev. Herman Burns.

"America,", Band.

Memorial address, Rev. Cecil E. Pollock.

Selection, Band.

Ritualistic service, Woman's Relief Corps.

Ritualistic service, American Legion.

"Star Spangled Banner", Band.

Closing prayer, Rev. Bernard G. Mattson.

It is hoped thnt as many as can possibly do so will be present at the ceremonies in the morning. The rapidly thinning ranks of our veterans of former wars have few more years to march. It is good sight nnd should stir every true American to his duty to be present. A fine program has also been arranged and the efforts that have been made along this line should receive the heartiest public support.

NEW GREENHOUSE A MODEL PLANT

FINEST TO BE FOUND IN NORTHERN MICHIGAN

A. E. Edwards & Sons Now Have Three Units of Plant Completed and in Use

A visit to Hillcrest Gardens, located on May street south of the city, and owned by A. E. Edwards & Sons, will convince anyone that Charlevoix has one of the most modern and up-to-date greenhouses in this part of the state.

As n part of the program of expansion announced last fall, the owners have installed a large greenhouse, 28x120 feet. The equipment, furnished hy the John C. Moringer Co., of Chicago, is of the most modern type and embodies the newest ideas in greenhouse construction. The base of the structure is mounted on a three-foot concrete wall, the glass sides rising four feet above that. A network of steel piping supports the glass roof, in the peak of which is a patented ventilating system.

The north end of the building is devoted to offices and potting room. Everything to expediate the work of handling flowers and plants will be fouad in this portion of the plant. Counters loaded with cut flowers and potted plants are on display at all times. A cellnr, 16x30, lies beneath the front end of the greenhouse and is divided into two compnrtments, one housing the hot water heating plant, the other being utilized as a bulh room.

In connection with flowers grown in the greenhouse, over four acres of land outside are devoted to summer flowers, perennials nnd bulbs.

With the newly installed greenhouse, Mr. Edwards now has three units completed and in use, two being used for flowers and another smaller unit taking care of tomato plants, etc.

Develupment of the floral end goes hand in hand with the extensive truck gardening business conducted by the firm for many years past. New roads have been laid out through the property and, with the blooming of summer flowers, it will be one of the show places of the town. Visitors are welcome to visit the greenhouses at any time, and are urged to come out and look the place over.

Grand Rapids Herald Tells of Author's Birth Place

Atwood, Michigan, a hamlet hidden quietly away in Antrim county and unknown probably to 99 out of every 100 native Michiganders, is of literary significance as the birthplace of Rex Ellingwood Beach, whose novels have been among the most popular published in the last 20 years says the Grand Rapids Herald.

"The Spoilers," one of the earliest and most lusting successes from the Rex Beach pen, has sold into tens of thousands of copies and, scenaroized, has proved a perennial favorite of the silver screen.

The outdoor life always nppealed to Rex Beach and it is sharply reflected in his published works.

The list of Beach successes starts in 1905 when "Pardners" was published. Next came "The Spoilers," probably his greatest book, and these were followed by such popular volumes as "The Silver Horde," "The Ne'er Do Well," "The Auction Block," "The Winds of Chance" "Flowing Gold" among other in addition to numerous magazine articles and short stories.

Flavor

is everything in breakfast oats

WHEN you find a person, especially a child, who "doesn't like oats," chances are they haven't tried the right kind.

Get Quaker Oats. Once you taste "Quaker" flavor, you are spoiled for ordinary oats.

That rich and toasty Quaker flavor is the result of some 50 years milling experience. No other oats approximates it.

Quaker milling, too, retains much of the "bulk" of oats. Thus those who eat Quaker Oats find laxatives seldom needed. Combining protein, carbohydrates, vitamines and "bulk" in excellent proportions.

Betty Bronson Stars in Film Coming to Palace

"The Golden Princess," which opens nt the Palace Theatre, Friday, May 28, is of especial interest to the picture-going population, and for a two-fold reason. It marks the debut of Betty Bronson as a full-fledged film star, and it deals with a significnnt and picturesque period of Americnn history—the California gold rush of 1849.

Ever since Betty scored such an instantaneous success with her delightful portrayal of "Peter Pan," her meteoric cnreer has been watched with a good deal of undisguised admiration, and there will be none to begrudge her this crowning promotion which elevates her to stardom.

Richard Dix in Title Role of Paramount's "Vanishing American"

The first and only reproduction of the history mnking episode of the conquering of the Cliffdwellers hy the ravaging Indian nation of Nnvajos has been made in the filming by Paramount of "The Vnnishing American."

A lnrge portion of the 10,000 Indians who appear in the sereen version of Znne Grey's great tribute to n fast disappearing race took part in the making of these scenes. They entailed the construction of huge settings in the almost inaccessible Sagi Canyon in northern Arizona, and also the building of the largest individual setting erected on the great Lasky ranch in the San Fernando Valley, California, in years. "The Vanishing American" at the Palace Theatre, Saturday and Sunday, May 29-30. Richard Dix appears as the Indian hero of the story while Lois Wilson, Noah Beery and Malcolm McGregor complete the list of featured players. The adaptation of Zane Grey's story to the screen was made by Lucien Hubbard. Ethel Doherty wrote the continuity. George B. Seltz directed.

My great-uncle shook his head.

"That would be poor tactics, either ...ay. A fight means loss of life and ...ip damage, and if it can be avoided ...ithout loss we are by so much the ...ainer. Also, the seas are dangerous ...r us, as you should know, chevalier ...—and for another reason, Martin ...grees with me the weather is work...ng up for a violent storm."

"St. Patrick aid us!" protested O'Donnell. "I'm not able at all to ...make out how ye stand, Murray, and ...that's the naked truth. One moment ...you're crying for a fight with Flint, ...and the next you say to avoid it, if ...that can be managed."

"Quite true, chevalier," assented my ...great-uncle calmly. "And I fail to ...see that my position is a false one. ...I prefer not to force the issue. My ...policy is summed up in that."

"But you don't know what der Wal...rus will do, dat's der trouble," said Peter, looking up from the chessmen with which he had been toying on the table-top.

"And that I have admitted, friend Peter," answered Murray.

"One night Bob undt me swam in der water from der Walrus to der James," pursued Peter as if my great-uncle had not spoken. "Maybe we could do dot again, ja."

"Ha!" cried O'Donnell, smiting the table with his fist. "The very thing."

But my great-uncle sat unmoved.

"It could be done!" I exclaimed. "And none besides ourselves have knowledge of it."

Murray's wonderful, tawny eyes settled upon my face.

"Aye, it could be done," he agreed. "But there is danger, lad. 'Tis a still night. You can hear the fish leap."

"And Flint's people keep a slovenly watch," I replied. "But Peter and I are good swimmers. We'll not make a sound."

Peter commenced to blow out the candles.

"Ja," he said. "Me, I don't like der water when it makes waves, but quiet it is nice."

My great-uncle smiled in the dwindling light.

"I should be a hypocrite as well as a fool, did I refuse your offer, gentlemen," he said. "'Tis not only our own lives are at stake, but Mistress Moira's too."

A groan came from O'Donnell.

"Ah, didn't I tell ye the way we would be left to the mercy of your cutthroats and fatchedrawers, Murray? And now 'tis yourself must admit it! A sorry business it is, and I wish to God I'd never heard your name or gone forth of Spain."

Murray himself blew out the last candle.

"Well, well, chevalier," he answered a little tartly, "forth of Spain you went, and aboard the Royal James you are, and the one hope of life you have is that you stay aboard the Royal James—and this is saying naught of the obligations we owe to your friends on the other side."

Peter's great bulk glided by us.

"I go get a rope," he squeaked.

"A rope!" hiccuped O'Donnell. "And if we don't end in the noose of a rope we'll likely be walking the plank. I care little for myself. I'll have seen my life and had my fling. But it was an ill day, Murray, you prevailed on me to fetch Moira along. I can't think what was in your mind—a young maid in a pirate hold! 'Tis wicked past belief."

"Tut, tut," remonstrated my great-uncle. "My reasons were of the best, and have been vindicated by events. But here is Peter. You found the rope?"

"Ja," answered Peter, and knotted an end around a leg of the table as I had done the night of our surreptitious entry.

O'Donnell sought solace in a glass of brandy. Murray assisted Peter and me to undress, and accompanied us to the stern windows.

"No needless risks, remember," he whispered as I crawled over the sill. "And above all, avoid discovery. Better learn nothing than be found out."

I had wrapped my ankles around the pendent rope and was prepared for a cautious slide into the water when a faint chuckle escaped him.

"What is it?" I asked.

"I was but thinking what a sturdy pirate you are become."

He withdrew his head before I could answer, and I dropped into the tepid water, with care that there should be no splash. An instant later Peter was beside me, and we began to swim with long, slow strokes in the direction of the Walrus, so impalpable was the texture of that breathless night. There was not even a star in the sky—and the sky itself was invisible.

The hull of the pirate ship did not take shape until we were under the sheer of the stern. A single, guttering lanthorn seemed to burn in the main cabin, which was tenantless. And we paralleled the starb'd side, attracted by a hum of voices for'ard.

Peter's hand on my shoulder detained me as we swam beneath the heel of the bowsprit.

"Here you climb oop," he breathed in my ear. "They are all on her deck. I t'ink dey smoke der pipe in council, ja!"

I trod water, and explored with both arms above my head.

"There's no rope within reach," I told him.

"Dot's all right. I lift you."

He was clutching the cutwater with both hands and bracing his feet against the swell of the bow.

"Come on," he urged. "Oop on to my shoulders. I hold you, ja."

"But if we splash?"

"We don't splash. You go oop; I go down under der water. Dot's all."

I forged alongside of him and gingerly clinched his immense shoulders, using a grip on his hair for haulage. Then I reached overhead ugalu, and this time got my hands upon a stay of the bowsprit which run from midway of the spar to a turnbuckle on the bow.

"Steady," I whispered. "I'm going to jump."

"Ja!"

I threw my legs upward and twined them around the stay, hanging like a monkey from it, and Peter went under with a gurgling ripple which might have been made by a fish. Presently he came to the surface and swam beneath me.

"Can you climb, Bob?"

"I think so."

"Good! I wait."

The stay was fortunately dry—had it been slippery-wet I could never have swarmed it—and I was able, after much effort, to secure a grip on the bowsprit and lift myself astraddle of it. I worked down the bowsprit to the lift of the bows; but still I could see nothing, even on the fo'csle. 'Twas plain, however, that here was no watch to fear, and I dropped to the deck and crawled aft on my hands and knees toward the buzz of talk, which I made certain now came from the waist.

The fo'csle was littered with spare cables, water-casks and other sailor's truck, which I had to avoid displacing, but I had my reward, for as I advanced the hum of voices dissolved into words and phrases.

—"a foxy 'un, Murray is," said a seaman's voice.

"And the James fellers'll fight us, whatever 'ee say," added a second.

"O' course they will!"

This was Silver's inimitable oily speech.

"Who wouldn't fight for the grandest fortune as any gentlemen adventurers ever had a chance at?"

I wriggled behind a chase-gun, and peered over its breech into the waist. Two battle-lanthorns were suspended from the mainyard, and their yellow glare revealed the Walrus' crew squatted in serried ranks around the butt of the mainmast, where Flint, Bones, Silver and several others sat on upturned rum-barrels.

Flint leaned forward, wrathfully fastidious, as I propped myself against a trunnion.

"But me if I thought to find such skulkers in my crew!" he snarled. "D'ye think to take any prize wi'out loss?"

"Aye," said a third seaman doggedly, "but we lot never yet fought wi' Murray. Them as does don't ha' luck."

A murmur of assent answered him.

"Ah," struck in Silver, "but there's a first time always, mates. Murray's like the rest o' us. A ball or a cutlass-edge will finish him. And I say again, who wouldn't risk death for more'n a million and a half o' pounds in good gold and hard silver as'll buy every man jack o' us such pleasures as few men ever comes by, mates?"

"But there's only as much aboard the James as we ha' here," objected one of the first speakers.

"True for you Tom Allardyce," said Flint. "But the rest's safe enough, ain't it?"

"There's only them few knows o' it," returned the man. "They said on the James there was but the three men and the girl was landed to bury it."

Flint's answering laugh was horrible.

"And d'ye think that out o' four people, not countin' Murray—and one o' the four a girl—we can't make one talk? I tell ye' Tom, the stuff is as good as divided."

"Ye ha' first to catch Murray," retorted Allardyce.

"And why won't we?" demanded Silver. "Didn't we take what he was ready to give us and thank him for it like blessed lambs? And if he does suspect, what good'll it do him? On a night like this he'll never know where we are until we're on him. Two good broadsides, and then we'll sweep his decks."

Nobody spoke for a time.

"When does the ebb make?" asked Flint with a stretch and a yawn.

"Another two glasses yet," said Bones.

"——, I must ha' a bit of sleep," growled the pirates' captain. "Come to a vote, lads, and be done wi' it. Will ye go or won't ye? Ye all know what mercy Murray'll give ye, if he ever hears o' this council—and there's them as would like to blab, be sure o' that."

Silver pulled himself erect, cuddling his crutch under his arm.

"Quartermuster speaks for the crew," he said. "And my view is as how the crew is for fightin' for their just rights. The Walrus has played second fiddle long enough, and here's a chance as isn't likely to come again."

There was a second brief interval of silence.

"Nobody contrary," announced the one-legged man cheerfully. "Council's over! Keep quiet, mates. No drinkin', no fightin'. There'll be plenty o' both later."

The squatting ranks broke up into groups, and a number of men strolled for'ard toward my biding-place. But I did not await them. From the shelter of the chase-gun I hunched myself back behind a water-cask, and so regained the bows, slipped overside and slid down the anchor-cable to the water.

A huge white shape floated up to me.

"Is dot you, Bob?"

"Yes. They're for attacking the James when the tide turns."

He headed down-stream without a word. We were half-way to the James before he spoke.

"Dot Murray, he is a lucky feller. Always gets what he wants."

"What does he want?" I panted.

"Now he gets rid of Flint undt der Walrus crew, ja."

"But he'll lose their half of the treasure if—"

"Maybe; maybe he don't. Andt after dot he gets rid of der James."

"You're crazy, Peter," I said indignantly, trying my best to keep pace with him. "He'd be stranded here."

"Oh, he don't do dot here—maybe he don't do dot at all; maybe der feller stops helping him, ja. But if he gets der chance, you watch him, Bob. He gets rid of der James, and maybe he gets rid of us, ja."

"Well, why do we help him, then?" I snapped, recalling my great-uncle's parting gibe.

"Dot's where he is smart, Bob. He makes it so we got to help him to safe our own skins, ja. Andt der little gal, too. For him and der Irisher dot drinks like a Lenape squaw I ain't got no use. But you undt der little gal—dot's different."

"Do you mean he intends to sacrifice all of us? And carry away the whole treasure for himself?"

"I don't know, Bob. Murray, he is a funny feller. Very funny! He likes der little gal. Maybe he likes me—I don't know. Andt he is honest about dot oldt king dot lifs in Rome. But if any of us come in his way, he would push us aside. Dot's him now!"

The stern of the Royal James rose before us, and in one of the open window's my great-uncle's fine white head showed like a faded picture in a frame seen across a darkened room.

"Once before he planned too big," Peter whispered on. "Maybe this time dott speaks loud to der feller undt stops him."

My great-uncle's voice floated down, quietly distinct.

"They are gone overlong. Gadzooks, chevalier, if they do not shortly return I'll ship my cable and take advantage of what remains of the flood to come at the Walrus and finish matters off-hand."

"O'Donnell's reply was simply a querulous echo from the interior of the cabin.

"That sounds as though he had some use for us," I murmured to Peter, noiselessly treading water beside me.

"Ja. Use he has for us. Maybe he needs us when he gets rid of der James, eh? If der feller fails him, he can have use for honest men, Bob."

"We'll soon know," I retorted, and twitched the rope which dangled by the rudder-post.

"Who is there?" challenged my great-uncle, instantly alert.

"Robert," I whispered back, and commenced to climb.

Both Murray and O'Donnell—the latter for the time being stirred out of his habitual gloom—assisted me over the window-sill, and it affected me oddly to note my great-uncle's unconcern for the water I dripped on his silken coat.

"You ha' suffered no hurt?" he asked eagerly.

"No, no," I answered. "Make haste to help Peter up. They are coming against us with the making of the ebb."

He was betwixt me and the window, and I could see the faint smile of satisfaction on his face.

"'Tis what was to be expected of them," he remarked. "We must improve our watch. 'Tis no compliment to our people that they failed to suspect aught of your going and coming."

Peter sputtered into the cabin like an enormous toad.

"Oof!" he squeaked. "I haf bubbles under my skin. We haf a fight tonight, Murray, ja?"

"Thanks to you and Robert, friend Peter, 'twill be rather in the nature of a chastisement than a fight," he answered urbanely. "If you will pardon me, gentlemen, I will go and complete the necessary arrangements."

A tinkle of glass told me that O'Donnell was refilling his goblet.

"What's a fight to the likes o' him?" muttered the Irishman dolefully. "Treachery and scheming and murdering, aye it's a fine night for such! Oh, blessed saints, where'll we be this time the morrow?"

The patriotic orders will also be present, representing the G. A. R., the Spanish War veterans and veterans of the World War. The Woman's Relief Corps is co-operating with the pastor and choir in the arrangements for this service. This service will take the place of the regular morning services of the churches co-operating and all the congregations together with the general public are cordially invited to be present.

Special music for the occasion will be rendered by a combined choir, singers from the various churches uniting with those of this church under the direction of Mrs. A. J. Stelter.

The sermon will be preached by the pastor of this church on the theme, "The Shrine of Memory in the Temple of Prophecy."

The other pastors attending will assist in the conduct of the service.

The Sunday school session will immediately follow and the young people's societies will meet at the usual time 6:30 p. m. The meeting of the juniors will be led by Ruth Smith on the topic "Children's prayers." The pastor will be present to assist the Juniors. Gwendolin Miller will preside at the piano.

The Senior society topic will be, "What we Read and Why" and the leader Paul Sloan.

Plans ahead. Children's Day will be observed by the Sunday school the following Sunday at the morning service hour, 10:30 with an enjoyable program, June 6th. The Sunday school will begin the same Sunday with a change of hour for the summer to 9:30 for the regular session. Full announcement of program for Children's Day will be made in next week's issue.

The society of Christian Endeavor will hold an Experience social on Monday, May 31st at the church at 7:30 p. m. All young people are invited to come and bring their friends to enjoy the fun and a good time and to help by their experiences to raise a fund to enable the society to send two delegates to the Young People's Summer conference at Olivet.

The Summer conference at Olivet occurs June 25-July2 and will bring together a fine group of some one hundred-fifty or more picked young people from the Congregational churches for the state for cultural study and fellowship in the interst of religious education and the training of young people for the work of the church.

We shall seek the co-operation of all the church in raising a fund to enable this church to be represented this year at this valuable conference.

During the coming week he will be away from the city Monday until Friday on a missionary tour assisting three members of our state staff in visits of inspiration and help two groups of Congregational missionary churches in the upper peninsula.

VISITORS DAY AT SCHOOLS A SUCCESS

Many Parents Viewed Excellent Displays Shown Last Friday

Visitor's Day at the Charlevoix public schools last Friday afternoon was a decided success, judging from the interest manifested and the number of parents who took the opportunity to visit the schools and view the work done by the students during the year.

Each grade room and all departments of the high school had a splendid display, showing specimens of work done by the students during the past year. Back-boards and walls were utilized for the displays, which included specimens of penmanship, maps, drawings, mounted cuttings, algebra and geometery propositions, etc., all of which reflected much credit to the students. A very line display of dresses and other articles of wearing apparel was shown in the domestic science department, members of that class also serving coffee and sandwiches during the afternoon.

A full afternoon could have been profitably spent viewing the different specimens on display, and, at the same time, visits of this kind to the school give the parents a chance to become better acquainted with the instructors, get a better idea of the work done by their children and incidentally create a closer relationship between the parents and schools. Parents are always welcome and are urged to visit the schools at any time.

PORTO BELLO GOLD

By Arthur D. Howden Smith

Copyright by Arthur D. Howden Smith WNU Service

"Safe, beyond question," I sought to encourage him as I drew on my breeches. "'Tis never the Walrus' scaly crew will overcome us."

"Be not too sure Master Ormerod," he retorted with unusual vehemence. "I am thinking there is the curse of high Heaven on this venture and all connected with it."

Nevertheless he buckled on his sword and accompanied us to the deck when we were dressed. Men were scurrying silently to and fro, and from an open hatch came the whine of tackle as a piece was shifted on the gundeck. Aloft, squads of topmen were unfurling shreds of canvas to give the James steerage way at need. On the poop my great-uncle was issuing his final orders to Martin, Saunders and Coupeau.

"You, Saunders," he said, "will stand by the anchor-cable with a broad-ax and upon my giving the word hew it asunder. Your position, Martin, will be in the waist. Keep men on the fore and main yards, ready to make sail when the cable is cut. Coupeau, of you I expect an initial broadside of crushing effect and a second fire if circumstances permit. Now to your stations, and above all things instruct your men to preserve silence. The man who makes a noise I will blow from a gun forthwith, and let that be my declaration to Flint."

The officers gave their acknowledgments and flitted away. Simultaneously Peter pointed up the inlet.

"See!" he exclaimed.

The Walrus' riding-light winked out. An interval of minutes, and one of the waist-lights followed it. Another interval, and she disappeared completely in the black maw of the night.

My great-uncle sneezed delicately.

"In the dark one is clumsy," he observed. "I fear I have abused my nose with an overheavy dose of Rip-Rap. Well, well! Perhaps there is a parable in the incident for such clever fellows as Captain Flint.

"I must ask you not to move about, gentlemen. We have the better part of an glass to wait for the ebb, but caution is our watchword!"

We heard the Walrus before we had sight of her—the slatting of a headsail, a rattling block, a vague creak of cordage. Then an impression of a mighty shadow, a towering spiderweb of spars and lacy rigging, stealing ghostlike from the enshrouding dark.

She floated nearer. Nearer still. And nearer. It seemed that the two vessels must collide, and the suspense became unbearable. I wondered at my great-uncle's restraint. Would he never— I gasped with relief as his cool, even tones clove the silence.

"Touch off, Coupeau."

Crash! The deck leaped underfoot; the anchored hull surged forward. A red sheet of flame girdled the James' side, and in the instant's glare the Walrus was revealed in stark detail against a setting of glittering, black water and low, forested shores. I saw a man in her foretop, aimlessly balancing a grenade. I saw men staring curiously from the gunports as our broadside smashed into them. I had a glimpse of the brutal face of Bones, peering over the bulwarks, a cutlass in his teeth.

The darkness returned, and a multitude of echoes dinned back and forth across the inlet. There was a rending and cracking of timbers, with such screams as I never hope to hear again, the screams of wicked men who face an unexpected death, oath and blasphemy and piteous appeals, all blended into one terrible, heart-searching whole.

My great-uncle's level voice dominated the confusion as easily as it had the silence.

"Cut your cable, Saunders!"

Flint's bellow answered from the Walrus.

"Give it to 'em, ye cowardly swabs! Stand to your guns!"

The red tongues of the Walrus' guns licked out at us; the staggering roar of their discharging smote the night. The fabric of the Royal James quivered and shook as the iron hail lashed into her. A moaning and screeching rose from waist, fo'cale and gundeck:

"Oh, God!"

"My leg! My leg!"

"They're out! My guts are a-runnin' out!"

"Where's my arm? Oh, God, where's my arm?"

But a third time my great-uncle mastered the uproar.

"Make sail, Martin!"

Coupeau had reloaded his guns, and the James fired a second broadside with the same crushing unanimity as before. The Walrus receded as if our fire had had the effect of physically repelling her from us. Clouds of smoke came between the ships, and I perceived that we were benefiting from the severing of the anchor-cable. The ebb tide was already sweeping us down the anchorage toward the open sea.

The Walrus shot off another ragged broadside, which for the most part splashed water or scattered mud, and then settled to a pegging chase, the Long Toms on her fo'csle barking lustfully as they tossed the twelve-pound shot athwart our decks. Our guns were silent. Our gundeck spewed forth men, whom Martin hustled to the yards to shake out every sail to catch the errant wind that veered gustily from southeast to southwest.

Colonel O'Donnell waved his hat at my great-uncle.

"What madness will have taken ye now, Murray?" he cried. "There was the grand chance ye had to finish the rascals once and for all. Are ye feared of them that ye turn tail—you that ha' struck first blow; aye, and second, too?"

"Not at all, sir," rejoined my great-uncle. "Having struck first blow and second blow, as you so aptly phrase it, I am of a mind to strike also the coup de grace. And this with as trifling damage to my own vessel as is possible."

"Man, you'll never have another such chance as that ye just cast away," mourned the Irishman.

"For a soldier, chevalier, you reveal astonishing lack of judgment," returned my great-uncle. "Had I remained to finish conclusions with Captain Flint in the narrow space of the anchorage I might conceivably have gained the victory, but it must have been by means of subordinating brains to brawn, and with loss in proportion thereto. I prefer to force him to sea, where, by maneuvering and proper strategy, I can secure the same object at a half or a third of the cost."

"'Tis all the same," retorted O'Donnell. "If ye sink him, ye lose his treasure."

"Quite true," assented Murray. "But what would you say to driving him ashore, eh?"

What O'Donnell would have answered to this I know not; for there was a sudden drumming of feet on the deck, and Moira cast herself into his arms.

"Oh, padre," she cried tearfully, "and are ye safe from the cannon? I waked in my bed with their roaring, and it came over me we were on the Santissima Trinidad once more, and poor Senor Nunez, the apothecary, groaning from his death-wound—and him that was looking forward to the quiet end of his days in the little house by Alcantara!

"And then I was thinking 'twas all a horrid dream. But the cannon blatted again, and the ship trembled, and there was a shriek at my very door. So out I ran in my shift, and Diomede the blackamoor was lying in his blood on the cabin floor, and Ben Gunn beside him a-praying. And with that I put on me enough clothing for decency's sake, and came to find ye, for my four bones are clattering with fear, and that's Heaven's truth!"

O'Donnell drew her close.

"There, there, acushla," he said with a tenderness he had only for her. "The worst will be over. There's naught for ye to fear."

She reached up and stroked his face.

"Troth, and I was thinking that same if I could but come at you, padre," says she. "But 'tis terrible fearsome to be sleeping by your lone self, and awaken in the midst of a sea-fight."

Her father swore under his breath.

"Ah, 'tis I was the weak, foolish fellow to drag you into such a venture! There'll come a day I must answer—"

She stopped his mouth with her hand.

"As if I'd be anywhere else than just here!"

I turned my head, not wishing to be prying into their affairs, and a quarter-mile astern I saw a jet of flame and heard the smacking report of one of the Walrus' chase-guns.

Moira said something more that I did not hear, and he interrupted her.

"Get ye below, my maid until we—"

There was a harsh, whistling sound in the air, and the hairs on one side of my head rose up, and on the heels of this came the thud of a shot as it struck timber.

"Close, egad!" commented my great-uncle.

O'Donnell swayed strangely and dropped over his daughter's shoulder.

"Padre!" The dazed grief in her voice was tragical. "Why won't ye stand? Are ye hit? Oh, blessed Virgin, there's no sense left in him! Bob, Master Peter, help me! He's so—so—heavy."

Peter and I jumped to aid her, and Murray was not far behind us. We lowered O'Donnell's tall body to the deck, and I ran for a lanthorn. When I returned with it my great-uncle had assumed control of the situation.

"We can feel no blood or broken bones," he said. "Hold your light here by his head, if you please, Robert."

The yellow glow played over the Irishman's long face. His lips were drawn back in what had been a smile; his eyes were fixed and glassy; no pulse beat in his corded throat. Moira crouched beside him, chafing his limp hands and crooning a medley of endearments in English, Irish and Spanish. Murray, opposite her, thrust exploring fingers into the bosom of her father's shirt. A startled look appeared in my great-uncle's lambent eyes, but his features preserved their immobility.

"'Tis useless to try to him, lass," he said gently. "He doth not answer, you see."

"But he will!" she protested. "Sure, ye must soon be finding what is wrong with him, sir. It may be a sup of brandy would bring him round."

My great-uncle reached across and plucked from her grasp the hand she had been rubbing.

"Come," he said, rising, "we will ask Peter to carry him to his berth, shall we?"

"But—but—we must bring him to!"

"We cannot bring him to," he answered kindly.

She stood up bewildered.

"Not—bring—him—to? 'But why?"

"Because his heart no longer beats," said my great-uncle. "Quick! Catch her, Robert."

She lay like a tired child in my arms.

"Dead!" she murmured faintly.

"He cannot be dead!" I exclaimed. "There's not a wound on him."

"Neen," said Peter.

He picked up the lanthorn from where I had dropped it on the deck and directed the light upon the upper part of Colonel O'Donnell's head. A blue bruise like a scar was spread across the Irishman's left temple.

"A grazeshot," pronounced Peter. "Per cannonball come dot close. Ja!"

"But the skin is not even broken," I objected.

"Ja, but dot don't matter."

Murray bent over and fingered the bruise.

"Peter is right," he said. "'Twas the concussion affected the brain. I have heard of such a freak shot, but never saw it happen before."

Moira clung to my arms.

"And he is really dead? The padre is really dead? And he unshriven, without a comfort of the Church! Oh, holy saints, be his advocates! Sure, was there ever a crueler end?"

She collapsed in a passion of weeping.

"Conduct her below, Robert," said my great-uncle. "We will follow you."

She suffered me to lead her from the poop without objection, more like a child than ever, sobbing and protesting and repeating the same things over and over again, in an abandonment of grief which only the Irish can attain.

"'Tis you are the kind friend," she stammered when we had reached her stateroom. "And oh, Bob, I have the sore need of you, I that am an orphan in a pirate ship. Truth, I haven't a friend in the wide world unless it be you and Master Coriaer. But I am the bad, selfish girl to be thinking of my own plight, and the father that loved me this moment gone up to Peter's gate, and him without the holy wafer to his lips or so much as a prayer said over him. Ah, what ill deed did we do, either one of us, that he should be taken from me so, without a word of parting? The sisters were always after saying we must reconcile ourselves to God's mercy, but 'tis little mercy has been shown to me."

I quieted her at last, brought her a swallow of brandy and induced her to lie down.

"I musn't be crying the way I will have done," she apologized, gulping her sobs. "Himself will be needing all the prayers I can say, and a boiling of candles, too. Do you go on, Bob—only promise you'll not leave me by my lone if there's more fighting. I could never stand to hear the thundering of the cannon after—after—that—and no one by to hold me take heart o' grace."

The gray dawnlight was seeping through the stern windows when I rejoined my great-uncle and Peter in the main cabin. Peter was as placid as ever, puffing industriously at a long clay pipe; but my relative displayed more concern than I remembered to have observed in him at any time in the past.

"I trust you were able to calm the poor lass?" he greeted me. "Stap me; what a sorry business! I'd never have chosen O'Donnell for a traveling companion, but without him I know not what to do. The whole venture—"

He shook his head and stared out the window beside him, clicking the lid of his snuffbox open and shut.

"But we have first to attend to the Walrus," he added presently. "I shall do so with the less reluctance after that last shot. The cursed luck of it! A beaten enemy's blow in the dark, blindfolded, by gad! And to think it must strike down of all men the one most essential to my schemes. I could— Well, well, no matter! We must triumph over the unexpected. 'Tis the chasm all great leaders must cross to win the final victory."

I found myself somehow instinctively hostile to his attitude.

"What have you done with Colonel O'Donnell?" I asked coldly.

"Peter carried him to his stateroom. We will give him decent burial when we return to the island. And perhaps some day we can come for him in state with a squadron of king's ships and bear him home to a grave in the land he was exiled from."

My great-uncle's spirits brightened noticeably as he contemplated the picture his words presented.

"Yes, yes," he murmured half to himself. "What O'Donnell could have done surely I can do. Our friends in Avignon will help. And, Robert!"

He turned to me.

"ON THIS MEMORIAL DAY--

we assemble to call the roll of the honored dead anew, and to lay a fresh tribute of love and gratitude upon their graves. The occasion is complete in itself. It needs no help of speech to make it memorable. The flags waving from the headstones with no stripe erased and no star obscured; bayonets gleaming, the tap of drums, flowers borne by loving hands; these speak to us today more eloquently than man can speak—in a language we all can understand.

NEW PALACE THEATRE
ATTRACTIONS FOR THE COMING WEEK

Friday, May 28th

Betty Bronson in "THE GOLDEN PRINCESS." Less than a year ago, Betty Bronson leaped into fame as Peter Pan. Now she's a full-fledged star. You'll love her as the Girl o' the Golden West in Bret Harte's stirring gold rush romance.

Also a Pathe comedy,—"Sneezing Breezers."

This picture is for the benefit of the "Ho-de-os-eh" Camp Fire Girls.

Saturday and Sunday, May 29 and 30

Richard Dix in "THE VANISHING AMERICAN." The screen's mighty tribute to the American Indian, first lord of the western continent—showing the parade of civilization from the first man and his mate down to the modern Indian—the Red Man's gradual eclipse before the irresistible sweep of white civilization—his final stand in the barren wastes of the far west—his retreat into the desert fastness marked by a trail of blood. All against the gorgeous background of the chasms and gorges of northern Arizona. Even Zane Grey's mastery of language could do scant justice to these awe-inspiring scenes. With a cast of 10,000 Indians and 100 principals, "The Vanishing American" is the final epic of the fast disappearing Red Man.

Also a Fox comedy, "Hold for Investigation."

Tuesday and Wednesday, June 1 and 2

Gloria Swanson in "STAGE STRUCK." She took a correspondence course in acting—and thought she'd make the Barrymores jealous. The story of three million girls' dream. Gloria Swanson's supreme achievement is comedy. Love laughs, gowns, gasps, gayety and novelty. Woven into an fascinating story of a girl's bid for fame behind the footlights.

$1,000 TO INVEST

For the man with a thousand to invest, I have a very good thing, right now.

For the man with more to invest, I can offer a choice among 7 1-2 miles of lake frontage, or 25 houses here in town, or a dozen good farms, to say nothing of some fine lots.

When Bull Is Impotent

There is no particular age at which a bull becomes impotent. This factor is governed much by the amount of service he is called upou to render aad also upon the way he is fed. Pampered, fat animals sometimes become impotent earlier thsa seven years aad some remaln serviceable much later. Not too fat, plenty of exercise, and regulation of the service to oae aad aot permitted too many cows at oae time, many bulls will last much loager thaa this.

1ST AMERICAN YOUTH ENTRY

Edith May Adams, eighteen-year-old Barrington, N. J., girl, presenting her entry blank to Mayor Kendrick in his office at City Hall, Philadelphia. The American Youth and Teacher Award was estnblished as a tribute to American youth aad teachers by tho Board of Directors of the Sesqui-Centennial Interaational Exposition, through which the people of the Ualted States and the world at large will celebrate the 150th anniversary of the Declaration of American Indepeadeace. The exposition will run from June 1 to December 1. Miss Adams' entry blank cited her for heroism displayed recently when she remnined inside a burning building helping doctors render first aid to injured firemen. She is a candidate for the Golden Eaglette, the highest gift within the hands of the Girl Scouts. Each state will elect a girl and boy and one teacher to represent them and the successful candidates will be the guest of the Sesqui officials from June 28 to July 5 at the exposition. This will also include a trip to Washington where they will be received by President Coolidge and presented with medals.

Plan for Feeding Corn and Soy Beans to Hogs

A very satisfactory method of feeding corn and soy beans to fattening hogs is to feed both free choice in self-feeder. One bushel of soy beans and from five to ten pounds of mineral mixture fed with six bushels of corn in a dry lot will produce 100 pounds of pork. Recent feeding tests at the Purdue experiment station show that when fed a mineral mixture with soy beans and corn it is not necessary to grind the soy beans, as the hogs will do practically as well when the soy beans are whole.

Objectionable Brands

Some wool growers have been using tar and other objectionable paints for branding their sheep. Tar softens during the scouring process and spreads among the wool fibers instead of being absorbed by the washing liquor. This injury to the wool is causing wool manufacturers immeasurable difficulty. It reduces the value of the wool, and the prejudice of wool dealers and manufacturers will result in lower prices in the locality or region where such branding is practiced.

GOOD ROADS

HIGHWAYS MUST BE BUILT FOR FUTURE

The "saturation point" for automobiles and trucks in this country does not depend upon the ability of the American people to buy more automobiles and trucks, but upon the capacity of our roads to accommodate the more than 17,000,000 motor vehicles now being driven, and the additional number being produced and sold. To provide room on our highways for this vast number of automobiles and trucks, there is only one solution—more roads and wider roads. To meet this problem, paved roads have come to stay.

Both drivers and pedestrians have experienced congested, impassable roads. Not only paved roads, but unpaved roads are inadequate for present needs. There is no economy in cheap, impermanent construction. Such roads are deceptive. We deceive ourselves into thinking that we will build permanence when we have more money, when our governmental expenses are less, when our revenues are greater. But in the meantime we spend vast sums for repairs that perish, for maintenance that mounts daily, for transportation costs far in excess of the amount we would spend in the long run for permanent construction in the beginning.

We collect and spend millions of dollars in the construction of roads. In 1924 this country spent approximately $165,000,000 in the construction of concrete roads alone. Additional millions were used for roads of n less permanent character. If these huge appropriations are to be handled wisely, we must plan for roadways which will not have to be relocated, which will not make purchase of new rights-of-way necessary, we must build bridges which will carry future traffic, and pavements which will stay laid no matter how congested the traffic becomes, no matter how heavy the loads imposed upon them, and no matter how ruthless the passing seasons.

The pressing need for more and wider paved roads has grown with increasing rapidity. No part of the country is immune from the problems of motorized traffic. Everyone benefits from road improvements if these improvements are permanent—the motor vehicle owner, the merchant, the manufacturer, the farmer. It has been said that those who use the roads should shoulder the burden of their construction and maintenance. But this idea is fallacious. The problem goes deeper than that. Every member of a community benefits in some way from paved roads, and hence the financial burden should be assumed by the entire community.

Larger and more evenly distributed yearly trade follows the paved road; outside money flows in over the easy pathway of the paved road, and the community prospers. Property values advance, and products of the farm, daily accessible to market, bring higher prices.

Owners of motor vehicles come into direct contact with the roads they are paying for. They see miles of cars creeping along, halting, stopping, slowing down. And for this there is little need. Such conditions exist only because we have been building for the present and not for the future.

Many counties and states are facing this problem with open eyes. No sooner is a road paved than traffic seeks out that road and fills it from curb to curb. It is the same everywhere. The paved road, as we know it today, does not relieve traffic. Rather it is a magnet which attracts to itself ever increasing numbers of motor vehicles. For the 17,000,000 cars which are registered in this country today, there are but 50,000 miles of hard-surface road available for travel. More than 340 cars to the mile, one car every 15 feet if strung single file along the roads. And every one of these 17,000,000 car owners is seeking these few miles of hard-surfaced roads. Less favorable roads may be there, but they are deserted.

These roads are sought because of the known and definite advantages of travel over their even surface. We need more and wider paved roads and we will build them; but they must be paid for. As Melvin A. Traylor, president of the First National bank of Chicago, said in his address to the forty-ninth annual convention of the American Bankers' association, "Our mounting debt may be tremendous, the taxes we pay may be burdensome, but is the debt out of proportion to our wealth and our ability to pay? Much of our recent debt has been for good roads. In most parts of the country these cost in the neighborhood of $25,000 a mile, but they add immediate increased value of $10 to $25 per acre to every foot of land they traverse.

Fine Steel Explains The Car's Long Life

This fact should be read and remembered by everyone who ever expects to buy a motor car.

In the percentage of costly Chrome Vanadium steel used, Dodge Brothers Motor Car outranks every other car in the world, regardless of price.

Chrome Vanadium is the ideal motor car steel. Its remarkable toughness and strength account for the fact that more than 90% of all the motor cars Dodge Brothers have built are still in service.

ANOTHER CHARLEVOIX CASE

Time-tested By a Charlevoix Resident

Just another report of sickness and suffering relieved by Doan's Pills. Another Charlevoix case that tells of lasting benefit. What can be more convincing? Thousands recommend Doan's for backache, rheumatic pains, headaches, dizziness and distressing urinary disorders. Doan's are a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys. They have helped thousands.

A Charlevoix case:

Daniel Himebauch, 107 W. Upright Ave., Charlevoix, says: "My back ached and mornings when I got up, catches took me across my kidneys. My kidneys were weak and acted irregularly. I heard a lot about Doan's Pills, so I used a few boxes, from Metcalf's Drug store, and they fixed me up in fine shape." (Statement given May 4, 1920.)

On October 10, 1924, Mr. Himebaugh said: "I am glad to recommend Doan's Pills for they certainly helped me."

HUNTING GROUNDS ARE GOING FAST

More Land Acquired in U. P. for Private Clubs

The transfer of 26,595 acres in Whitefish township, Cheppewa county from the Bartlett interests to a group of Buffalo and New York business men has been announced. The property is to be used for recreation purposes, the purchasers having already formed the Deerhaven hunting club.

It is understood that an option has also been secured on the town of Shelldrake, long the site of the Bartlett company mills, and that the site will be acquired and made the base of operations for the club.

The property sold by the Bartlett company to Mr. Folkner is all in Chippewa county. It is bounded on the north by Lake Superior, on the east of Whitefish Bay, on the south by the Tahquamenon river and on the west by the Luce county line.

The Bartletts retain 400 or 500 acres on the south branch of the Shelldrake river, this property containing a hunting lodge, and being retained solely for hunting and recreational use.

This is the second big tract of land to be acquired by private interests in the upper peninsula with in the past few months and which will be converted into private hunting or game reserves. It is known that several other similar deals are bidding all bearing out the assertions that the north country is on the eve of a season of decided activity in recreational property of all kinds.

DAIRY FACTS

MAKING UP RATION FOR A DAIRY COW

There are three substances which must be considered in making up the ration of a dairy cow. These are contained in almost all feeding stuffs to a greater or less extent. They are protein, carbohydrates and fat. Some feeds contain a high percentage of one of these and other feeds contain a high percentage of another. The protein or nitrogenous substance is most expensive of the three. It is used by the animal in production of hair, hoof, hide, horn, blood and muscle. Such feeds as alfalfa, cowpea and clover hay, cotton and linseed meal, bran, oats and gluten feeds contain a high per cent of this substance. The carbohydrates (sugar and starches and fat) are used for the same purpose and may be classed together. These substances produce heat to keep the body warm, furnishing energy and make the fat that is stored in the body and in the milk. Such feeds as corn, kaffir and the silage and fodder from these plants, timothy, hay, millet, oat and wheat straw, all contain a good per cent of carbohydrates. All of the feeds mentioned contain some fat.

A balanced ration must contain both protein and carbohydrate feeds. In sections of the states, where alfalfa, clover, peas or other legumes can be successfully grown for hay, they should be depended upon to furnish the protein in the ration and since protein is furnished in the roughage it is best to feed a grain which is rich in carbohydrates to balance the ration. Thus if alfalfa hay is available for roughage, corn is the logical grain ration. Where legumes cannot be grown the roughages usually are depended upon to furnish carbohydrates and under this condition the grain ration should be made up of some feed rich in protein. If the roughage consists of cane or kaffir hay or fodder or prairie hay, the grain ration should be made up of such feeds as bran, oil meal, oats, etc.

The protein feeds are the most expensive ones on the market, hence a cheaper dairy ration can be obtained in localities where the protein is produced in such home-grown feeds as alfalfa, pea and clover hay.

Grooming Dairy Cows Is Favored on Every Farm

While the average man is ashamed to go on the road with a dirty team that has not been curried that morning, he thinks nothing of letting his cows go all winter without even brushing them.

Cows need and respond to grooming as much as horses, yet somehow the curry comb and brush in the cow barn seem entirely out of place to many men. The idea that cows do not need grooming is a good companion for the one about planting potatoes by the moon, just a notion.

Of course, grooming must start early and be kept going. A great aid to keeping cows clean is a clipping machine. The flanks and parts of the belly that most usually become soiled can be clipped without injury to the cow. The amount of bedding available and the warmth of the barn must be taken into consideration, of course. Clipping heads and necks also reduces the hiding places of lice and makes their extermination easier.

Dairy Industry Is Big

The dairy industry in the United States produces an annual value of more than $2,000,000,000. If the 24,000,000 dairy cows that produce this wealth could stand in single file westward from New York city the line would reach around the earth with enough left over for a double row from New York to San Francisco.

Dairy Facts

Warts on cow's teats can be cured by applying olive oil daily.

Money which furnishes feed for good cows is invested, not spent.

Variety in the diet is essential to health and growth, so recent experiments show.

A better quality of dairy products can be manufactured from carefully produced milk.

Potatoes fed to cows give practically no objectionable flavors or odors to milk, regardless of time or quantity.

In producing clean milk, dairymen not only perform a service to mankind by minimizing the dangers of impure milk, but they also perform a service to themselves.

A cow that produces 30 pounds or more of milk per day requires a ration rich in lime. Clovers or other legumes will supply this need.

When fed to dairy cows with silage and in connection with a high protein concentrate, sudan hay is a valuable feed.

In only two years out of the last six has the dairy cow population of the United States increased in proportion to the increase in human population.

MURDER TALE RAISES DOUBT

CONFESSION RELATES ALLEGED KILLING IN FALL 1923

Officials in Charlevoix and Emmet Counties Have Had No Previous Record of Case

The Petoskey Evening News is responsible for the following story, published in a recent issue:

Whether or not a man was killed late in the fall of 1923 at a spot approximately twelve miles south of Petoskey, is puzzling the Emmet and Charlevoix county sheriff and prosecuting attorney offices.

According to admissions made by one Lloyd Bailey, of Lansing, to the secret service branch of the state department of public safety, an unknown stranger was heaten over the head with an automobile jack, left on the roadside, nnd later died in the arms of a passing motorist.

Bailey alleges that his two brothers, John and Roy Bailey, were driving north in a touring car, and thnt somewhere near Petoskey they overtook a man whom they asked to ride with them and who took the rear seat. According to Bailey, his brothers were confronted with a gun in the hnnds of the stranger, and ordered to drive him to Petoskey.

Leaving the car for a moment, all three started to re-enter the auto, whea John Bailey grabbed a jack from the seat and hit the hold-up stranger over the head ten or twelve times, according to Lloyd Bailey's statement.

MEMORIAL DAY WELL OBSERVED

CEREMONIES ATTENDED BY LARGE CROWD

Impressive Program Carried Out at Cemetery—School Children Well Represeoted

Memorial Day in Charlevoix was greeted with what could not have been more favorable weather, the day breaking bright, clear and warm, with the result that n lnrge number of people were present at the ceremonies conducted at Brookside cemetery.

Promptly at 9:30 the parade, led by the Charlevoix eity band, left the corner of Bridge street and Park avenue, where the different organizations had assembled, proceeding down Bridge street to the city park at the corner of Antrim, where a pause was made for a brief ceremony in memory of those who lost their lives at sea, conducted hy the American Legion and W. R. C., and a flornl wreath was cast upon the waters of Round Lake. From there the parade marched up State street to the cemetery.

A large crowd of Charlevoix citizens met them at the cemetery gates nnd assembled themselves within to witness the ceremonies, which were brief but impressive. R. L. Lewis, commander of the Legion, acted as master of ceremonies, making a short address on the significance of the occasion. Rev. Herman Burns of the Baptist church opened the exercises with a beautiful and impres-

Beautiful Boulder Park

One of Cottages Under Constructioo At Boulder Park

In this issue of the Courier will be found two pages of display ads. run by Earl A. Young in which our readers will find a good description of activities at this newest sub-division that will be a surprise to those who have not been keeping pace with the rapid progress being made in the laying out of streets and cottages in course of construction.

We understand that eight cottnges have already been contracted for, four of which are now under way and only hy not being able to secure moro workmen are the others being held up.

Only a quarter of a mile from the city of Charlevoix and being situated on beautlful Lake Shore Drive along Lake Michigan's beach, this will no doubt be soon known as Charlevoix's most desirable summer residence section.

While all of tho front lots are sold, the rise from the lake is so prominent that many purchasers seem to prefer the lots further back, this, of course, being a matter of choice.

Mr. Young informed the writer that fifty men are now at work and more can be employed at any time application for work is made, laborers, stone masons and carpenters being badly needed, so this employment of labor is a good thing for our city and should bo nppreciated by all that wish to see Charlevoix grow.

One of the most notable real estnte transaetlons of the year is the purchase by Mr. Young of the quarter mile adjolning the lots already laid out, and this will make n little over half n mile of Boulder Park frontage on Lake Michigan.

Plans are already made to beautify the grounds and lake frontage, which, when completed, will make the drive along the lake one of the most talked of drives we will have to offer our summer visitors, and it should help wonderfuuly to advertise our now fast-growing CHARLEVOIX THE BEAUTIFUL, of whieh we are all so proud.

More power to you Earl, let the good work go on and all public-spirited citizens will approve of your efforts to make Charlevoix a still better place to come to each year.

Rich

in flavor... that's why Quaker Oats entices youngsters

THE way to make children like oatmeal is to give them the kind they like.

Thus millions of mothers insist on the Quaker brand. Children who ordinarily don't like oats, take readily to this rich and toasty kind.

Quaker flavor is due to exclusive milling processes which took us 50 years to perfect. Processes, too which retain much of the "milk" of oats, which makes laxatives less often needed.

Thus protein, carbohydrates, vitamines and "bulk," are combined in making Quaker Oats an excellent food balance.

Quick Quaker cooks in 3 to 5 minutes. Thus makes the richest breakfast the quickest.

The price is the same as for ordinary oats. When a substitute is accepted, you alone are the loser.

Chance Plays Big Part in Picture

May McAvoy gives the finest dramntic performance of her career in "The Road to Glory," Fox films version of Howard Hawks' fine original story, which comes to the Palace Theatre, Friday, June 4. Fortified with a superb dramatic story and a role that runs the gamut of emotions, this sterling little actress adds new laurels to an already fine list of screen achievements.

"The Road to Glory" is an original story of Howard Hawks, who also directed the picture. It deals dramatically with the part Chance plays in human lives and tells the experiences of Judith Allen, played by Miss McAvoy, whom Chance topples from the pedestal of youthful ecstacy to grim despair.

Mary Pickford Ban on Costume Film

Mary Pickford has joined the "back-to-the-earlier-days" movement and in her new photoplay, "Little Annie Rooney," which comes next Saturday and Sunday, June 5 and 6, to the Palace Theatre under the a United Artists Corporation release, will be seen at her best in the hoydenish and raggamuffin roles that so endeared her to the public and won for her the title "The World's Sweetheart." She has temporarily, at least, abandoned the fussy furbelows of the costume drama and the golden slippers of the fairy tale.

There are youngsters galore in "Little Annie Rooney," most of whom never before have been before the camera. They are of all types and nationalities; ten races, in fact, being represented. Dogs, goats, monkeys and horses, also are included in the "cast."

In Memoriam

In loving memory of our dear little daughter and sister, Constance Rose, who passed away one year ago today, June 1st 1925:

Rapid and swift the moments glide;
One year ago our dear baby died,
She suffered here, but now she is blest,
With perfect peace and heavenly rest.
The depth of sorrow we cannot tell
Of the loss of the one, we loved so well;
And while she sleeps a peaceful sleep
This memory we shall always keep.

"Ah! my boy this unfortunate incident is my best justification for pressing you in my cause. What should I do without you and Peter? 'Twill be for you two, with Mistress Moira, to establish our connections with the king's agents in France."

"You seem to forget I am no Jacobite," I answered unpleasantly.

"Tut, tut, you shall be as stout a Jacobite as Princess Charles himself."

"Not I!"

He smiled.

"We'll leave that to Mistress Moira."

"Maybe you forget her Walrus," interposed Peter.

"Not so, Peter. I shall dispose of the Walrus within the next few hours."

"Andt Gott," added Peter as if Murray had not spoken.

My great-uncle laughed merrily.

"My dear Peter, men of judgment will inform you that there is no God—or, if we concede a God, there is every reason to assign a superior degree of power to the inevitable devil representing the opposing virtue of godliness. Indeed, did I incline to bow down before any superhuman authority I should elect Satan by preference. But a ripe experience has inclined me to the view that the devil is as much a figment of men's imaginations as God. Since the beginning of recorded time a priestly caste—But here we are drifting into a philosophical discussion; and as you very properly reminded me, the Walrus awaits our attention. Let us go on deck."

"Der wise man don't know efery'ting," answered Peter. "Neen!"

"Essentially true," agreed my great-uncle. "I must confess myself ignorant of such staple points as why we are here, the excuse for human existence, the relative significance of this world of ours, the utility of the differing qualities of goodness and evil. But any serious consideration, friend Peter, must convince as profound a thinker as yourself that the very existence of men and women is of itself prima-facie evidence that there can be no Divine Author of omnipotent or sentient powers."

"We better go on deck," said Peter.

"After you," protested my relative as we rose. "'Tis a pleasure to debate with you, Peter. Take care, pray! Gunn has not removed all of the evidence of Diomede's passing. Strange, is it not, how a black fellow like Diomede and a man who hath been the confidant of princes, like O'Donnell, should both be abolished by a simple organic disruption? That alone, Peter, should suffice to disprove the humbug of an all-wise Providence. An all-wise Providence, forsooth! Here am I, arranging to reconstruct for the better a most unhappy trio of kingdoms, with consequences bound to improve the well-being of the entire world, and my plan is suffered to be placed in jeopardy by an ignorant sailor's lollad shot in the dark! What could be more absurd?"

The Walrus Was Running Due North Before the Wind Betwixt Us and the Islet Called Skeleton Island.

Peter did not answer him and we passed out upon the main deck, where sailors were busy removing the traces of the Walrus' first broadside which had wrought a certain amount of minor damage and caused the deaths of several men. 'Twas now light enough to see about us, but the light was of a quality I had never known before—a hard, coppery glare, with the sun obscured from view. The sea was quite flat, and the wind continued intermittent, veering from one quarter of the south to the other. Spy-glass Island lay to larboard, its contour amazingly distinct—as if it were bitten into the frame of steel-blue sea and dully shimmering sky that encompassed it. The Walrus, like the James, had cleared Captain Kidd's anchorage, and was running due north before the wind betwixt us and the islet called Skeleton Island.

Murray bent a shrewd eye aloft and hailed Martin.

"How is it you carry no sail on the mizzen? he demanded.

"Account o' that there last —— —— —— shot, sir'n," answered the mate, tugging his forelock. "If ye look to it ye'll see as how a —— —— twelve-pounder bored into her."

We all followed his quivering finger to a gouge beneath the mizzen yard. The shot that had grazed Colonel O'Donnell's head had done more than graze the mizzen. The mast was whittled away to a depth of several inches as cleanly as if a giant's ax had chopped into it.

My great-uncle took snuff very slowly.

"What luck! What luck!" he muttered.

And then louder:

"'Twas an expensive shot for us, gadzooks! Well, Martin, we must fish the mast at our earliest opportunity, but we can make shift to corner Flint without it. The Walrus is foul and heavy in the water. The James can sail circles round her in this wind."

There was a worried look in Martin's weather-beaten face.

"Askin' your pardon, sir, I don't like this —— —— wind. We're in for a —— of a storm or I'm a —— —— —— lubber."

My great-uncle shrugged his shoulders.

"Storm or no storm, Martin, the Walrus carries nigh four hundred thousand pounds."

"Aye, sir; and by your favor, best sink her and be done wi' it and run for shelter."

"Sink her! Man, we'd lose the treasure."

"Better lose the Walrus' treasure than go down ourselves," insisted Martin doggedly. "Have it your own way, sir, but I'm a —— —— —— if it ain't fixin' to blow up one o' these here tarrible Carribbee storms as pluck the hairs out'n your head."

Murray regarded the four quarters of the sky for several moments.

"With your prognostications I find no quarrel, Martin," he said finally; "but I believe we have ample time to head the Walrus. Flint dares not run south because he knows the hornet's nest we have stirred up in those seas. My purpose is to box him in and force him to beach. If this wind continues we should bring him to book on the north coast of the island, and so soon as the Walrus has taken ground we will wear and beat in for the North Inlet. Doth that satisfy you?"

The mate hesitated.

"You be cap'n, sir. But if 'twas my say we'd head back in to the anchorage, Walrus or no Walrus."

My great-uncle stiffened.

"'Tis impossible, he replied haughtily. "However, we will hear up for the Walrus, and you may bid Coupenu to see what harm he can contrive against her with his chase-guns."

Martin saluted and went for'ard. My great-uncle led us to the poop.

"Your old sailor is eke much of an old woman into the bargain," he remarked perfunctorily, climbing the stin'ld ladder ahead of me. "Let him but sniff the approach of a tempest, and he is all for the nearest haven—aye, the hardiest buccaneer no less than the law-abiding merchantman."

"O'Donnell was right, it seems, when he advised you to finish the task you had begun in the inlet," I snapped, none too pleased, myself, with the outlook.—

"In that case, my dear nephew, a half of us must have perished," retorted my relative. "You have had some experience of these wolves of ours when their lusts are roused. No, no; I am no milk-and-water fighter, but I prefer to batter my enemy safely at long range rather than give him an equal opportunity to tear my throat."

Peter grunted.

"You said?" Murray inquired courteously.

"Neen, I saidt not'ings. But I t'ink—I t'ink it is all right if you get der Walrus and yourself come safe. If you don't the lot' it don't matter if you do der todder; neen."

My great-uncle raised his prospect-glass.

"You have ably stated one of the primary rules of success in any branch of warfare, friend Peter," he said. "Captain Flint is making better going of it than I had expected. Apparently by some perversity of our confounding ill-luck he hath a more constant wind close under the island than we out here. Ah! I hear Coupenu's bark."

A cloud of smoke rolled aft as the long eighteen on the lee'd side of the James' fo'csle boomed. The shot dashed up a fountain of water a few feet ahead of the Walrus, which was now running neck and neck with us. Flint replied with one of his long twelves; but the shot fell short, and he edged away as much as he dared, which was very little, for Murray had seen to it that he had bare sailing-room. The chase-gun barked again, and this time the round shot ricocheted from the water's surface and slapped into the Walrus' hull.

"Neat," commented my great-uncle; "but what we require is a fair hit on a spar."

Coupenu realized as much, as was evidenced by his next two shots going high and striking the water beyond the target. But I was distracted from watching his efforts, for at the fifth discharge Moira O'Donnell crept up the poop ladder, her eyes wide with misgiving.

"Truth, yourself promised only a few minutes since you'd not leave me by my lone was there more fighting, Bob," she reproached me.

"'Tis no fight," I answered.

"Aye, we do but seek to drive yonder knaves ashore," Murray assured her. "They cannot reach us at this distance."

She surveyed the scene with a doubting eye and was constrained to credit us.

"But why is the light so strange?" she demanded. "'Tis as if the door of a cookstove was ajar."

"We are in for bad weather, sweet," replied my great-uncle. "You must go below."

But she shrank away from him and clutched firmly an arm of Peter and me, each.

"No, no, I'll not be going down there again," she cried. "On the inside of a door I can think of naught but the sorrow that is come upon me. I'll stay up here in the open."

"Certes, this will be no safe place in a storm," I urged.

But she clung the tighter to us.

"I'll not go down. I'd sooner be taken by the pirates than go down. Down there the noises of the water and the ship will be like the crying of the banshee in the Green room where grandfather died. No, no! In the cabin there is only death, and the light is dim, and the noises will be whispering at my elbow the livelong time. I'll have none of it! Sure, I care not what danger there is, if I can stay up here and meet it in the open."

"We let you stay," said Peter soothingly. "Ja, we better let der little gal stay, Murray. Bob andt I, we take care of her."

"That will we," I indorsed him.

My great-uncle eyed me a thought quizzically.

"You are, it seems, subject to change of opinion, Robert," he remarked. "By all means let Moira remain with us. I duresay she'll be none the worse for a wetting."

But the storm held off throughout our morning-long chase down the east coast of the island and then out to sea to herd the Walrus in from the north. Coupeau hailed the miserable craft again and again, and shot away her foretopmast; but she steadily clawed offshore and made desperate attempts to steal ahead of us and win a clear path before the wind, and when, toward noon, the breeze died completely the positions of the two vessels were practically the same as they had been from the beginning of the rat-and-mouse game that Murray played.

The Royal James, by nimbler handling, had gained in the last hour, and was more than a cannon-shot to the northwest of the Walrus, with the northernmost of the island's chain of hills—the one the pirates called the Foremast hill—almost due southeast of us. If the wind sprang up again in anything like the same quarter the Walrus was fast in Murray's trap. She would have the choice of two alternatives: She could stand on and fight, with the practical certainty of destruction for all hands, or she could drive ashore, in which case the crew might take to the woods, with every prospect of eluding pursuit, unless Murray made a determined effort to comb the island's craggy recesses. After the long-range battering they had received all morning, on top of the hammering in the action in the dark, there was not much doubt that the Walrus' disorderly crew would take the decision into their own hands and choose the latter as offering a fair chance of life, no matter how circumscribed.

The helmsman had just turned the hour-glass, which lay beside the compass in the binnacle box in front of the steering-wheel, when a shout came from Martin, who was half-way up the main rigging, sweeping the horizon with a glass. My great-uncle had been pondering the desirability of getting out the boats and undertaking to tow the James within range of the long eighteens, and he called back—

"Is it wind?"

"Aye, aye, sir," roared Martin—and there was no oiliness now in the old fellow's tones. "There's the ——— ——est blow o' wind as ever came out o' the ——— ——— bowels o' the sky or I'm a ——— ——— swab as ever was."

He tumbled from the rattlines and ran aft to the break of the poop, his face lifted earnestly in appeal.

"Best let me lay an ax to the mizzen, sir," he called.

My great-uncle took snuff, calmly deliberate.

"Curb your fears, Martin," he answered. "I have weathered a lifetime of gales in the Royal James. Take in sail, of course; but if we sacrificed a mast needlessly 'twould cripple us for weeks. Where away is this wind?"

Martin waved an arm across the northwestern arc of the horizon.

"Look for yourself, cap'n. I be an old man, and I never seed the like."

Murray's reply was to swarm up the mizzen rigging with the uncanny agility of which he was capable, and I climbed after him. We were some fifty feet above the deck when we saw clearly with the naked eye a vast purple canopy arching forward across the northern sky, a thing of splendidly colorful intensity, savagely beautiful. Jagged streaks of lightning flushed forth from its murky depths. A tattered fringe of storm-clouds whipped out ahead of it like the tentacles of some monstrous sea-creature. And it advanced at an incredible speed, covering miles of sea and sky in the few moments that we watched it.

My great-uncle's jaw squared grimly.

"'Tis too late to sacrifice the mizzen," he said. "We'd not have time to clear the wreckage."

His commands rang through the ship.

"Aloft, topmen! Strip her to a storm-jib! Hola, Coupenu! Double-lash your chase-guns and be certain the broadside batteries are secured and the ports closed. Battea all hatches, Saunders!"

'Twas as much as I could do to keep pace with him as he descended to the poop.

"Fetch a coil of light rope, Robert," he ordered briefly. "We shall all require to be lashed fast."

"Shall I carry Moira below?" I asked.

He hesitated.

"No, she will have a better chance—"

He checked himself.

"Let her bide on deck. Here we can aid her at need. Haste, boy! We must have the rope before the wind strikes us."

I slid down a stay to the main deck and dug the rope out of a chest of spare gear which was bolted to the cabin bulkhead. My great-uncle's last words had impressed me even more than the spectacle of that baleful curtain across the northern sky; and I was thrilled, too, by the task of preparing the ship to meet the tempest. There was almost no noise—a few shouts of command and hails of acknowledgment; but every man worked as if his life depended upon it. When the jibsheet fouled Martin slashed it free with his knife and the sail came down with a run. By the time I had regained the poop the upper spars already were bare.

Murray was standing with Moira and Peter beside the helmsman, and while they stared, fascinated, at the oncoming storm, his eyes were upon the Walrus.

"Flint must be sober," he said bitterly. "He is taking in sail. Stap me, what a fit end to a luckless day! In the hollow of my hand, and now—Aye, 'twould be all ways fitting did he escape, whilst we—"

A snarling moan, as of great winds tortured and confused, came to us from the belly of the storm. The sky darkened. A gust of air, sulphurous and warm, ruffled my hair. The moan became a howl, a clamor.

My great-uncle snatched the clasp-knife from the belt of the helmsman, a splay-footed Easterling whose flat, gap-toothed face had remained impassive during all the excitement since Martin's warning shout had announced the storm's approach.

"Give me that rope, Robert," he exclaimed. "I am a fool to stand talking. Here, Peter!"

He flung the Dutchman a length of it.

"Bind Mistress Moira to those ring-bolts—and best knot her to yourself as well. She'll not be able to stand alone. Ahl me with this fellow here, Robert. We must tie him to the wheel."

One of the clouds in advance of the storm curtain reached out over us with a crackle of lightning-bolts and spatter of rain, and our fingers flew as we secured first the helmsman and then ourselves. The voice of the tempest was become a sullen, animal roar, riven at intervals by the crash of the thunder. And the immense curtain of its front overhung the James, impenetrably sooty at the base, opaquely purple as it toppled forward. The Walrus was a specter ship to leeward, and disappeared in the gloom as I watched.

"Oh, holy Mother!" gasped Moira. "'Twill be the end of all things."

And so it seemed. The Walrus was gone. The northern coast of the island dimmed and vanished. For an instant the peak of Foremast hill hung in the upper air. Then that, too, was blotted out. The purple twilight deepened. Rain sheeted down from clouds

CHLORIDE TREATMENT FOR MAIN HIGHWAY

State Trunk Lines M-1, 11, 13 and 14 to Be Made Dustless

That dust layer is to be applied to all main trunk lines in this district is the good word brought by A. L. Burridge, division engineer, from a meeting of highway officials at Lansing, to Cadillac last week.

M-13 is to have an application of calcium chloride about June 15 for its entire length. Previously only the portion south of Cadillac has been treated. M-22 is on the program and probably M-55 will receive some, making the trunk lines in this vicinity free from dust.

M-10, M-11 and M-14 are also on the list. These highways will receive either calcium chloride or tar treatment so that tourists won't have to "eat dust all summer" as Mr. Burridge put it.

The chloride will be applied twice this season, the first time about June 15 and then again before Labor Day. This treatment costs about $250 a mile, as it takes about eight tons for both applications. Sometimes five tons are put on the first time and the other three applied the second time.

The money is well spent in the opinion of the road engineers as in this way everyone gets some benefit from it. Residents and tourists share alike in the benefits from the dustless roads.

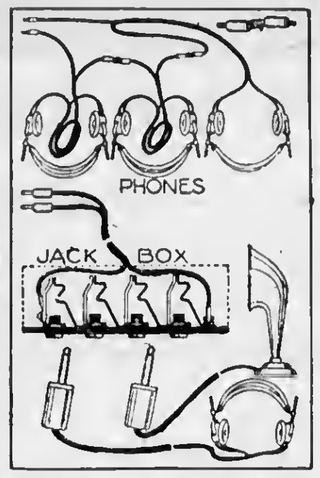
Use Jack Box for Phone Connection

One to Four Sets or Loud Speakers May Be Used at Same Time.

A loud speaker is generally used for radio reception, providing there is sufficient volume to warrant its use. On small sets, and even with the more powerful receivers, it is desirable to use headphones while tuning for distant stations. However, extra headphones must be connected in the circuit if more than one person is to enjoy radio in this fashion.

Old Way Has Drawbacks.

The easiest method to connect more than one set of headphones to a set is by wrapping wire around the ends of cord tips, as shown in the illustration, so that the current must pass through each set in turn before completing the circuit. This method has its drawbacks, for the connections are seldom securely made, and they pull loose at the least tug of the cords. One or more pairs of headphones will be shorted whenever two tips accidentally touch each other, causing loud clicks in the remaining headphones in the circuit.



Quick and Easy Changes Possible by Use of Jack Box.

Connected in Series.

The jack box, designed by Maj. Herbert H. Frost, enables from one to four sets of headphones, or loud speakers, to be used at the same time and quick and easy changes possible. Four simple closed circuit telephone jacks are connected in series and inserted in a small box. When a plug is inserted it opens the circuit and compels the current to flow through the headphones. When the plug is withdrawn the jack snaps together and allows the current to flow through the circuit as before.

This arrangement is very helpful when tuning with the headphones, allowing the loud speaker to remain in the circuit at the same time. Others in the room may hear as soon as the operator tunes in a station with the headphones loud enough to operate the loud speaker without the need of changing plugs.

Lead-in Insulator of an Improved Design

Many fans use porcelain tubes as insulators when bringing the lead-in through the window sashes. However, as commonly used they are unsatisfactory, since they allow snow, rain and cold air to enter the house. The illustration shows a cross section of an improved insulator.

Two one-inch brass bolts with small heads are soldered to a piece of No. 14 copper wire as shown. The wire should be of such a length that the bolts extend from the ends of the tube about one-half inch. A nut is put on one bolt, and the other bolt and wire are inserted in the tube. The tube is then stood on end and filled with melted resin. A nut on the topmost bolt completes the insulator.—Radio Digest.

Poor Reception Often Due to Parallel Wires

Many times, to make the appearance of the home better, the antenna and ground wires are run either together or parallel to each other, says Radio World. This causes the current in the antenna to leak into the ground (due to the mutual inductive or capacitative relation to the wires) before it reaches the set. You thereby lose some current, which is at best very feeble when it first reaches the antenna. If the little that comes in is diminished; then what cause has any one for expecting loud reception. Of course, in the more elaborate outfits (six-tube sets, etc.) you don't notice the loss so much, but in the three and four-tube sets it is very noticeable.

Brass Wire in Antennas

Never use hard drawn brass wire in radio antennas. Although brass is a fairly good conductor of electricity, it has the disadvantage of becoming brittle when exposed to the atmosphere. An antenna in which brass wire is used is apt to snap if exposed to a strong wind.

Legislation to improve safety on the highways has been introduced into 38 state legislatures since January 1. This legislation will increase to 23 the number of states which require that all drivers of moter vehicles shall be licensed. Fourteen more states will require licenses for drivers of vehicles for hire, while there would remain 11 states without operators' license law. Twenty-two states require some examination.

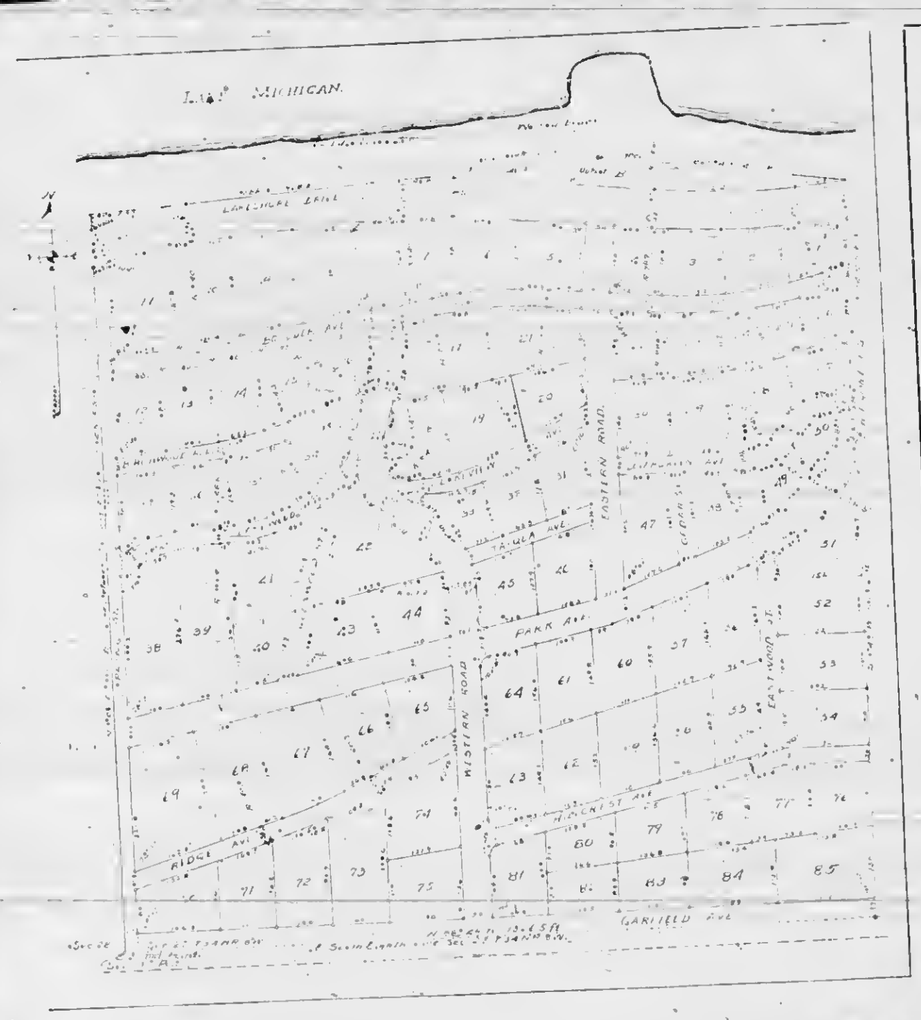
BOULDER PARK

"Sunset from Boulder Park"



Seven Stone Cottages---Starting to Build

By JUNE 1st

Only through a visit to BOULDER PARK on the beautiful Lake Shore Drive where you may see for yourself the progress in building that is being made can you be convinced that the evergreen and birch tree beauty spot of yesterday is so rapidly being converted into a little city of homes that soon will be known as one of Charlevoix's most desirable summer residence sections.

Only high class cottages will be allowed to build and all so far contracted for are to be of stone, although frame cottages that come up to Boulder Park standard will be permitted.

All of the front lots have been sold, but on account of the rise in elevation as you get away from the lake, many of the early purchasers took the lots further back in preference, before the front lots were taken.

Charlevoix's closest subdivision, fronting one half mile on Lake Michigan and only a quarter of a mile from the city; the wonder of all now is that it was not subdivided and offered to the public years ago. A study of the plat will cause you to marvel at the generous size of the lots and how the ordinary checkerboard effect was avoided in platting.

I own and control Boulder Park and all I ask is that you accept my invitation to come out and see and judge for yourself.

From Detroit News, May 2, 1926:

"Buyers of lots in Boulder Park located just southwest of Charlevoix, are assisted by Earl A. Young, the subdivider, in making arrangements for stone cottages, which may be constructed at low cost by using the materials at hand.

"As I read the above my mind went back to a year and a half ago (I stayed late that fall) when Mr. Young told me of his plans for Boulder Park. I have quite a strong imagination and tried to think clear up to the place Earl carried me in his description of how things would look in June 1926, but I can see now that I was kidding myself as I really did not think he could do it.

Today I dropped into his office and found him working on an ad. 'Come on out Jones (he calls me Jones) and see for yourself, he said, and as I had my Corona along I said, 'All right I'll do that and write the editorial for that ad,' and here it is:

"I've travelled about a bit, that's my business, travelling and writing. Because I tell the truth people take my tips, and here is one free of charge: 'Buy your Boulder Park lot and buy it NOW.' Young's dream is sure coming true.

"I'm going to spend the summer here and you will hear more from me later, on CHARLEVOIX REAL ESTATE."

scarce higher than our waist-beams. A lurid glare of lightning flickered and was quenched in the sea. And the wind smote us with a mad howl of exultation, sucking up into its embrace everything that was not fastened to the deck.

The James shuddered under the blow, bearing down by the head and heeling to starboard. My great-uncle and I were pushed forward on our faces. The helmsman was doubled over the wheel. Peter bent to cover Moira, crouching above her on hands and knees.

Presently the ship righted herself; but as she neared an even keel there was a prolonged cran-au-nick! of breaking wood, and the wounded mizzenmast went by the board, crushing a score of men in its fall and brushing as many more through the hole it stove in the starboard bulwarks.

A wall of agony pierced thinly the tumult of the storm, and the James was jarred from end to end as the big spar, with all its litter of yards and top-hamper, lunged at the hull like a trip-hammer, its dead weight dragging us broadside on into the path of the waves which followed the wind's first irresistible rush. Steep walls of water dropped on us from as high as the mainyard, thudding hollow on poop and forecastle. Giant combers crowded so fast that we choked beneath their deluge. The waist was a lather of creamy seas that wrenched and battered at hatchcoamings and bulwarks.

Murray staggered to his feet and set his lips to my ear.

"Must—cut—free— mizzen — breach —hull—"

So much I understood, and assisted him to slash the rope which bound us to the deck. Peter saw what we were up to and loosed himself, taking care in his deliberate fashion to strengthen Moira's lashings. Then the three of us fought our way down into the hell-reck of the waist, where small hoats and water-butts and dead men swirled fore and aft in a torrent of pounding seas.

There were axes in the box from which I had procured the rope, and we equipped ourselves with them, waded thigh deep through the tangle of water and wreckage and attacked the maze of stays and rigging that united the dangling mizzenmast to the ship. Not a man helped us. There was not a living man in sight aft of the mainmast, and it was as much as a man's life was worth to try to work aft of that point, for on the one side there was a wide breach in the bulwarks through which the waves poured, and opposite was the gap the mizzenmast had crushed. Whoever crossed the deck there must have been carried overboard, one way or the other.

Where we were we had some slight shelter from the poop, but 'twas sufficiently hazardous in all conscience. I can see my great-uncle still, in his black silk coat and breeches, all adrip with the salt water as he labored with the energy of a man of half his age, always swift to perceive the strategic center of the tangle, always first to wade into the tricky web of cordage where a misstep meant a plunge overside.

Twice Peter rescued him from certain death, and once the Dutchman saved me when a mountainous sea curled down upon us over the James' bulwarks and was like to have carried me off in its passing. And it was Peter whose brute strength and coolheadedness made the most of my great-uncle's agility of wit, and hewed and hacked the mizzenmast from its moorings. Aye, and none too soon; for when we clambered back on the poop Moira met us with hands clasped in terror and pointed to leeward where a rocky headland loomed through the gray rain.

Murray gave it one look and leaped for the wheel. The Easterling was bent over in the odd, huddled posture he had assumed from the moment the storm hit us, and he lolled sidewise as my great-uncle grasped his shoulder, his body all askew from the small of his back upward. He made no response, and slipped lower in the coils of rope that bound him to his post; his gnarled fingers slid off the spokes, his feet went out from under him.

"His back is broken," shouted my great-uncle.

The James had begun to gather headway; but as the wheel was released from the dead helmsman's grip her head fell off, and she dropped sluggishly into the trough of the seas which surged over the shattered waist, and one green hill of water burst squarely on the poop, hurling us to the deck. Peter recovered his footing before either Murray or I, shoved the Easterling's body aside and gripped the wheel in his own hands. Slowly, the buoyancy all out of her, the Royal James swung around in response to the rudder's thrust and lumbered off before the wind.

The headland Moira had sighted faded into the mist; but my great-uncle shook his head sadly.

"We are making water," he shouted to me; "and the island is to leeward. We can scarce weather it, and if we do—"

A faint hail reached us from the forecastle.

"Land—"

And a rent in the storm-clouds showed a second and lower headland fair over our larboard bow.

Peter started to put the helm down to enable us to bear off as much as possible and have whatever chance there was of clearing it; but Murray caught his arm.

"No, no, Peter!" cried my great-uncle. "Head up! Head up! 'Tis the North Inlet! If we can pass in to starb'd of that spit we are safe."

"Ja," squeaked Peter, and his iron muscles forced the rudder over until it neutralized the drive of the wind and sea; and foot by foot the Royal James made her soothing, passed the east spit with half a cable's length to spare and opened a narrow, bottle-shaped roadstead, with tree-clad shores that offered protection from any storm that blew.

The rain was still pelting down. The surf was foaming on the outer beaches; the wind whistled shrilly in the rigging. But to us that prospect was the fairest ever seen. Moira sank to her knees in prayer beside the dead pirate. My great-uncle stepped to the rail and bade the survivors of the crew get sufficient sail on the ship to give us steerageway. And I—I tried to shake Peter. He blinked at me solemnly.

"I t'ink Hoti spoke out loudt to der tdeill today, Bob," he said. "Ja!"

CHAPTER XIV

Disaster

Another less self-assured than Andrew Murray must have been dismayed by the series of misfortunes which had beset him. We were safe, but no more. The Royal James was sinking in water so rapidly 'twas necessary to beach her on the mud-flats at the south end of the inlet. She leaked like a sieve where the mizzen-mast had thumped her side, and her upper works were in splinters. In the fight with the Walrus and the storm we had lost eight-odd men, but more serious than this were the deaths of the two mates. Martin's body was found near the stump of the mizzen; he had been struck down by the mast he so distrusted. Nothing was ever seen of Saunders, and we could only suppose that he had been swept overboard.

The crew were apathetic and sullen, inclined to be mutinous and resentful of my great-uncle's authority. For the first time they had reason to question his omnipotence, and it required a full display of his ruthless temper to reduce them to subjection—an accomplishment to which he was aided considerably by Coupeau, and I am free to admit, by Peter and me, who could not afford to risk the brutal license which would certainly follow a successful revolt of the gundeck's polyglot horde. The former galley slave was a redoubtable ally with the nine-tailed cat, and a bruiser whose fists were as deadly sure as the long eighteens he handled so deftly.

The rain and wind ceased with the approach of darkness, and my great-uncle had the men mustered under the poop, many of them still bleeding from the punishment they had received. And of all his feats I deem that the most remarkable: To face, practically unaided, upward of a hundred and fifty men, who had just been cowed in the act of mutiny, without even sufficient light to enable him to exploit the compelling gleam of his tawny eyes. He beat them down—and held them down—by sheer power of will and utter fearlessness.

"You stand upon the deck of a wrecked ship," he said bleakly. "Under hatches lies sufficient treasure to make every one of you comfortable for life, to buy you dissipation or place or fortune, whichever you prefer. One man can lead you to repair the ship and conduct you where the treasure will be of use to you.

"I am that man. Without me you are doomed to spend your days chasing the goats on those hills; and if there is any repetition of the disorder exhibited today I shall maroon all of you save a number required to handle the ship.

"Get to work. Before you rest I expect the maindeck to be cleared and staging rigged overside for resheathing and caulking."

He drove them until midnight, then sent them reeling to their hammocks.

In the morning a systematic plan of occupation was arranged. By Coupeau's advice a handful of the more amenable of the crew—mostly negroes, Portuguese, Italians and Frenchmen of the south—were organized as an afterguard, and the remainder were divided into squads headed by men selected for skill at some special trade. One squad were to overhaul the sails and cut and sew from spare canvas a suit for the new mizzen, which a second squad were to hew on the slopes of Spyglass mountain and transport to the ship. A third squad were to repair all exterior damage to the hull; a fourth were to recalk the started seams; a fifth were to attend to whatever internal repairs were necessary.

Coupeau was placed in charge of the work aboardship, and the rest of us carried Colonel O'Donnell's body to the top of a small hill east of the head of the inlet. There, in the midst of a grove of pines, we laid him to rest. 'Twas a noble situation for a wanderer who had never reached his goal, with the clashing boughs and the distant thunder of the surf to sound a requiem until the end of time and a view over green meadows and dwarf woodlands to the white rim of the beach and the blue sea, shining in the sun.

Yesterday seemed years past. I blinked my eyes, looking from the peaceful garb of nature to Moira's slim body huddled in prayer beside the mound of raw earth amongst the pine needles. On the edge of the grove the men who had dug the grave were playing a gambling game with the pine-cones. Peter leaned on a musket, gravely compassionate. My great-uncle, his eyes puckered in thought, was staring out to sea. As I watched, he twitched my coat sleeve and drew me to one side.

"I shall leave you to amuse yourself as you choose for the remainder of the day," he said. "'Tis for you and Peter to safeguard the maid. I must ascertain, if possible, what hath become of Flint."

"And then?" I asked.

"Then?" His eyebrows arched in surprise. "Why, then, Robert, we shall continue as we have done hitherto."

"You must pursue this insane scheme?"

He was as patient with me as if I were a fractious child.

"'Tis no 'insane scheme,' but a coup of high politics of fascinating import, my boy. I own to disappointment it doth not appeal to you more readily. What? Shall we cry quits, simply because of shipwreck? And after every move hath turned as we plotted it should?"

I shook my head hopelessly, but decided to try again.

"Bethink you," I argued, "the longboat can speedily be made weather tight. In her we might reach—"

"Put it from your mind," he interrupted with a hint of iron in his voice. "You little know me, Robert, if you reckon me one to turn back from what I have begun—in especial, this matter which consummates the ambition of my life."

"But we—"

This time the iron was uppermost.

"Boy, you are essential to my plans. Much as I love you, I— But we'll not talk on that plane. I am none for threats. Let it suffice that you are not to mention the subject again."

He wheeled around and left me, and with his escort of tarry-breeks strung out behind him was soon hurled in the undergrowth on the lower flanks of the hill.

The sun was past meridian when Peter and I induced Moira to abandon the unmarked mound, and to divert her mind we led her on a trump to the shoulders of the Spyglass, where a score of the James' men already had felled a giant fir and were lopping the branches from the trunk preparatory to removing the hulk. In the forest near by we killed a mess of birds, and Peter skillfully broiled them over an open fire, and after that, since she professed to enjoy the silence of the mountain side, we pressed on, beyond hearing of the ringing axblades, and finally came to the foot of the steep pinnacle of rock which was the lens of the Spyglass.

Here we would have halted, but Moira had heard the story of the watch the pirates maintained from the summit, and she insisted on completing the ascent, despite the lateness of the hour. And we, because we were for doing anything that would please her that day and relieve her grief, consented.

It was more difficult than it looked, and the sun was low in the west when we reached the platform at the top, stained and blackened by the beacon fires that had burned there. But the view was glorious. The island was spread out beneath us like a map on a table, from the Foremast hill on our left all the way southward along the rocky spine of the west coast to Mizzenmast hill and a cape to the west of that which old Martin had called Haulbowline head. Eastward the irregular shore run north and south to the indentation of Captain Kidd's anchorage, the tree growth matted and thick except for several savannas midway of the island and the silvery loops of two or three small rivers.

We identified the masts of the James, rising above the headwaters of the North Inlet, and the opening in the trees north and east of Captain Kidd's anchorage that was the then Moira cried out:

"Oh, blessed saints, will that be a ship? Do but see, Bob! Peter!"

She pointed eastward; and there, sure enough, was a ship, or rather, the tops'ls of a ship barely lifting over the horizon's rim. If it had not been for the fact that the sun's rays were striking level across the ocean floor, and so were reflected from the sheen of the canvas, we should never have seen it, not even with a glass.

"Aye, 'tis a ship," I said.

"Ja," nodded Peter. "It is Flint."

Moira shivered.

"Truth, and who would it be else?" she demanded. "There'll be no friends of us come sailing, I'm thinking."

"It might be a king's ship—" I began.

"No, then," she denied. "If this island is gone all these years without the king's ships finding track of it, 'tis not like they will come upon it sudden in this moment."

"'Tis a ship indeed," I agreed unwillingly. "Aye, a full-rigged ship."

"Ja, a ship like Flint's," said Peter.

We were silent for an instant, the three of us, dazed by the suddenness with which our whole outlook on the future had been changed by this unexpected boon of tops'ls leagues away.

"He must have weathered the storm," I said foolishly.

"And now the red fighting will begin all over again," cried Moira. "My soul, will there not have been deaths enough for this treasure? Every piece of it must be speckled with men's blood."

"We better tell Murray," said Peter, moving toward the lip of the rock platform.

"But how could Flint be back so soon?" I protested. "'Tis impossible, Peter. He could not—"

"He could, Ja," returned the Dutchman imperturbably. "Der storm was by in two glasses—undt der ship is yet, maybe ten leagues off, neen?"

We descended the Spyglass in silence. Twilight overtook us in the forest at its base, and we were obliged to retrace our course with extreme caution, so that eight bells rang from the Royal James—so exact was the restored discipline on that stranded hulk—as we stepped from the trees on to the shore of the North Inlet and hailed for a boat.

My great-uncle met us at the gangway, immaculate in plum satin coat and blue plush breeches, white silk stockings and black pumps, silver-buckled, his hair neatly tied with a black silk ribbon.

"Well, well," he greeted us, "you have made a long day of it. I trust you are not overtired, sweet?"

This to Moira.

"I have delayed sitting to dinner in hopes that you would be here. You can see—" he waved an all-inclusive hand—"that we have not been idle aboard the James. We begin to look like a ship again, eh? Did you by chance see the new mizzen?"

"You better come to der cabin," said Peter abruptly.

"I beg your pardon?" answered Murray.

"We have something to tell you," I said. "It cannot wait."

His eyes plumbed mine, and I think he knew in that instant what our news was. He clicked open his snuff-box and dusted a pinch delicately into his nostrils.

"No?" he murmured. "Sets the wind in that quarter!"

And he offered Moira his arm with the line, stately dignity he achieved to perfection, and led the way aft to the main cabin.

"You may place the viands upon the table, Gunn," he said to the steward when we were seated. "We will serve ourselves."

He turned to Moira.

"I recommend this fish. 'Tis fresh-caught, and Scipio—" the remaining blackamoor—"is a master at such dishes; he hath stuffed it, you see, with greens he procured from the woods."

"We have scant time to eat, let alone to admire our food," I interposed roughly. "From the peak of the Spyglass at sunset we sighted the topsails of a ship in the east."

"I presume that you believe her to be the Walrus?" he returned.

"Ja," said Peter. "It is Flint."

"My faith, and who else would it be?" asked Moira.

"Doubtless you are right," he assented. "Indeed, I do not question it. Our examination of the northern and eastern beaches today failed to disclose a trace of evidence to indicate what had become of the Walrus, and had she sunk some wreckage must have washed ashore. Yes, yes, my friends, our ill-luck is still with us. Flint rode out the storm. But that, Robert, is no reason why we should not secure the maximum of satisfaction from this tasty meal—all the more particularly so when we consider 'tis like to be the last for some days we shall eat in such comfortable surroundings."

"You take it coolly!" I exclaimed.

"And why not? 'Tis a disaster, I grant you, yet irritation will not aid me to replace it."

Who Pays?

You who believe advertising is too expensive to justify its returns, listen to this:

Twenty-eight years ago the makers of a watch produced a cumbersome but accurate article, priced $1.50. Without advertising, they sold that first year 12,000. The next year, with a little tentative advertising, they sold 87,000. Encouraged, they increased the factory and distribution, reduced the size of the watch, priced it $1.00, made a reasonable advertising appropriation—and sold 485,000.

When the makers of a famous camera began advertising thirty years ago, they made one camera which took a 2 1-2 inch picture, and sold at $25.00. In 1917, that time of the distressing upward trend of prices, these people made a better camera that sold for $10.00.

Who pays for the advertising? Or does the advertising pay for itself?

And what good advertising executed in attractive print did for the watch and the camera, it can do in some measure for your product.

Let us talk with you about the printing of your sales literature.

Coupeau was placed in charge of the work aboard ship, and the rest of us carried Colonel O'Donnell's body to the top of a small hill east of the head of the inlet. There, in the midst of a grove of pines, we laid him to rest. 'Twas a noble situation for a wanderer who had never reached his goal, with the clashing boughs and the distant thunder of the surf to sound a requiem until the end of time and a view over green meadows and dwarf woodlands to the white rim of the beach and the blue sea, shining in the sun.

Yesterday seemed years past. I blinked my eyes, looking from the peaceful garb of nature to Moira's slim body huddled in prayer beside the mound of raw earth amongst the pine needles. On the edge of the grove the men who had dug the grave were playing a gambling game with the pine-cones. Peter leaned on a musket, gravely compassionate. My great-uncle, his eyes puckered in thought, was staring out to sea. As I watched, he twitched my coat sleeve and drew me to one side.

"I shall leave you to amuse yourself as you choose for the remainder of the day," he said. "'Tis for you and Peter to safeguard the maid. I must ascertain, if possible, what hath become of Flint."

"And then?" I asked.

"Then?" His eyebrows arched in surprise. "Why, then, Robert, we shall continue as we have done hitherto."

"You must pursue this insane scheme?"

He was as patient with me as if I were a fractious child.

"'Tis no 'insane scheme,' but a coup of high politics of fascinating import, my boy. I own to disappointment it doth not appeal to you more readily. What? Shall we cry quits, simply because of shipwreck? And after every move hath turned as we plotted it should?"

I shook my head hopelessly, but decided to try again.

"Bethink you," I argued, "the longboat can speedily be made weather tight. In her we might reach—"

"Put it from your mind," he interrupted with a hint of iron in his voice. "You little know me, Robert, if you reckon me one to turn back from what I have begun—in especial, this matter which consummates the ambition of my life."

"But we—"

This time the iron was uppermost.

"Boy, you are essential to my plans. Much as I love you, I— But we'll not talk on that plane. I am none for threats. Let it suffice that you are not to mention the subject again."

He wheeled around and left me, and with his escort of tarry-breeks strung out behind him was soon hurled in the undergrowth on the lower flanks of the hill.

The sun was past meridian when Peter and I induced Moira to abandon the unmarked mound, and to divert her mind we led her on a tramp to the shoulders of the Spyglass, where a score of the James' men already had felled a giant fir and were lopping the branches from the trunk preparatory to removing the bark. In the forest near by we killed a mess of birds, and Peter skillfully broiled them over an open fire, and after that, since she professed to enjoy the silence of the mountain side, we pressed on, beyond hearing of the ringing axblades, and finally came to the foot of the steep pinnacle of rock which was the lens of the Spyglass.

Here we would have halted, but Moira had heard the story of the watch the pirates maintained from the summit, and she insisted on completing the ascent, despite the lateness of the hour. And we, because we were for doing anything that would please her that day and relieve her grief, consented.

It was more difficult than it looked, and the sun was low in the west when we reached the platform at the top, stained and blackened by the beacon fires that had burned there. But the view was glorious. The island was spread out beneath us like a map on a table, from the Foremast hill on our left all the way southward along the rocky spine of the west coast to Mizzenmast hill and a cape to the west of that which old Martin had called Bunbowline head. Eastward the irregular shore ran north and south to the indentation of Captain Kidd's anchorage, the tree growth matted and thick except for several savannas midway of the island and the silvery loops of two or three small rivers.

We identified the masts of the James, rising above the headwaters of the North Inlet, and the opening in the trees north and east of Captain Kidd's anchorage that was the then Moira cried out:

"Oh, blessed saints, will that be a ship? Do but see, Bob! Peter!"

She pointed eastward; and there, sure enough, was a ship, or rather, the tops'ls of a ship barely lifting over the horizon's rim. If it had not been for the fact that the sun's rays were striking level across the ocean floor, and so were reflected from the sheen of the canvas, we should never have seen it, not even with a glass.

"Aye, 'tis a ship," I said.

"Ja," nodded Peter. "It is Flint."

Moira shivered.

"Troth, and who would it be else?" she demanded. "There'll be no friends of us come a-sailing, I'm thinking."

"It might be a king's ship—" I began.

"No, then," she denied, "if this island is gone all these years without the king's ships finding it out, 'tis not like they will come upon it sudden in this moment."

"'Tis a ship indeed," I agreed unwillingly. "Aye, a full-rigged ship."

"Ja, a ship like Flint's," said Peter.

We were silent for an instant, the three of us, dazed by the suddenness with which our whole outlook on the future had been changed by this unexpected loom of tops'ls leagues away.

"He must have weathered the storm," I said foolishly.

"And now the red fighting will begin all over again," cried Moira. "My soul, will there not have been deaths enough for this treasure? Every piece of it must be speckled with men's blood."

"We better tell Murray," said Peter, moving toward the lip of the rock platform.

"But how could Flint be back so soon?" I protested. "'Tis impossible, Peter. He could not—"

"He could, Ja," returned the Dutchman imperturbably. "Der storm was by in two glusses—andt der ship is yet maybe ten leagues off, neen?"

We descended the Spyglass in silence. Twilight overtook us in the forest at its base, and we were obliged to retrace our course with extreme caution, so that eight bells rang from the Royal James—so exact was the restored discipline on that stranded hulk—as we stepped from the trees on to the shore of the North Inlet and hailed for a boat.

My great-uncle met us at the gangway, immaculate in plum satin coat and blue plush breeches, white silk stockings and black pumps, silver buckled, his hair neatly tied with a black silk ribbon.

"Well, well," he greeted us, "you have made a long day of it. I trust you are not overtired, sweet?"

This to Moira.

"I have delayed sitting to dinner in hopes that you would be here. You can see—" he waved an all-inclusive hand—"that we have not been idle aboard the James. We begin to look like a ship again, eh? Did you by chance see the new mizzen?"

"Yaa! better come to der cabin," said Peter abruptly.

"I beg your pardon?" answered Murray.

"We have something to tell you," I said. "It cannot wait."

His eyes plumbed mine, and I think he knew in that instant what our news was. He clicked open his snuff-box and dusted a pinch delicately into his nostrils.

"So?" he murmured. "Sets the wind in that quarter?"

And he offered Moira his arm with the line, stately dignity he achieved to perfection, and led the way aft to the main cabin.

"You may place the viands upon the table, Gunn," he said to the steward when we were seated. "We will serve ourselves."

He turned to Moira.

"I recommend this dish. 'Tis fresh-caught, and Scipio—" the remaining blackamoor—"is a master at such dishes; he hath stuffed it, you see, with greens he procured from the woods."

"We have scant time to eat, let alone to admire our food," I interposed roughly. "From the peak of the Spyglass at sunset we sighted the tops'ls of a ship in the east."

"I presume that you believe her to be the Walrus?" he returned.

"Ja," said Peter. "It is Flint."

"My faith, and who else would it be?" asked Moira.

"Doubtless you are right," he assented. "Indeed, I do not question it. Our examination of the northern and eastern beaches today failed to disclose a trace of evidence to indicate what had become of the Walrus, and had she sunk some wreckage must have washed ashore. Yes, yes, my friends, our ill-luck is still with us. Flint rode out the storm. But that, Robert, is no reason why we should not secure the maximum of satisfaction from this tasty meal—all the more particularly so when we consider 'tis like to be the last for some days we shall eat in such comfortable surroundings."

"You take it coolly?" I exclaimed.

"And why not? 'Tis a disaster, I grant you, yet irritation will not aid me to retrieve it."

Who Pays?

You who believe advertising is too expensive to justify its returns, listen to this:

Twenty-eight years ago the makers of a watch produced a cumbersome but accurate article, priced $1.50. Without advertising, they sold that first year 12,000. The next year, with a little tentative advertising, they sold 87,000. Encouraged, they increased the factory and distribution, reduced the size of the watch, priced it $1.00, made a reasonable advertising appropriation—and sold 485,000.

When the makers of a famous camera began advertising thirty years ago, they made one camera which took a 2 1-2 inch picture, and sold at $25.00. In 1917, that time of the distressing upward trend of prices, these people made a better camera that sold for $10.00.

Who pays for the advertising? Or does the advertising pay for itself?

And what good advertising executed in attractive print did for the watch and the camera, it can do in some measure for your product.

Let us talk with you about the printing of your sales literature.

LAKES OPEN TO TROUT FISHING

Closed Stream Order Does Not Hit Larger Bodies

Closing of feeder streams of the stnte to trout fishing does not affect inland lakes, according to ruling of John Baird, director of conservation.

"While the lakes are 'clear' so far as the major purpose of the ruling is concerned," Baird said, "it does not mean that fishermen can go beyond the confines of the lakes proper.

"There can be no encroachment upon the inlet or outlet of rivers or streams flowing into or out of the lake where such waters have been classed as closed."

We keep hearing that the outside world is coming to Charlevoix to get rich out of our real estate boom.

The question is: Will Charlevoix let them make all the money?

If lake frontage is a good investment for outsiders, it is just as good for Charlevoix people.

GREAT SESQUI STADIUM OPENED AT PHILADELPHIA

The giant arena in the centre of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition site in Philadelphia was built in approximately 300 working days. It was completed and in use a month before the opening of the big exposition which celebrates the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence. This photograph, made from the air, shows nearly 3,000 boys on the playing field, massed there for the dedicatory exercises on May 1 which formally opened the structure. In the stands are seated 10,000 persons watching the program. A group of 10,000 persons is a large crowd but they are only a "drop in the bucket" in the big Philadelphia stadium. The boys paraded onto the field to the accompaniment of fourteen bands and there went through their drills and athletic exercises for the benefit of city officials and parents.

Motion carried.

On motion the council adjourned.

Bloody Milk Is Due to Ruptured Blood Vessel

When a cow gives bloody milk, it is due to a rupture of a small blood vessel in the udder. When a cow is fresh, it usually is due to the swelling in the udder, but when it occurs later in the lactation it usually is due to an injury to the udder. When it is due to an inflammation, the trouble is over as soon as the inflammation leaves the udder, but when it is caused by injury, the cause must first be removed before a cure can be effected.

When the blood comes away in lumps, there is an infection in the quarter and the quarter will usually be lost.

Increase of Cows

Milk cows increased in number in Ohio by 2 per cent during 1924. The total now stands at 1,101,000 head.

"An animal infested with parasites," says Paul Gerlaugh, live stock extension specialist at Ohio State university, "cannot produce the best results any more than an automobile can run its best when handicapped by a flat tire."

ORCHARD GLEANINGS

WOOLY APHIS IS PEST IN ORCHARD

The woody apple-aphis is perhaps one of the worst pests of apple orchards, as it works mostly upon the roots, where it often escapes detection until the tree is badly injured or killed.

The aphids will be found clustered in bluish-white cottony masses looking like patches of mold, and around wounds or scars on the trunk or limbs. Their presence in these places is always an indication that others are feeding upon the roots where they cause gall-like swellings so that the roots often become a mass of knots and ooze if the injury continues. When badly attacked, the tree becomes sickly, the foliage turns yellow and the tree may be killed.

On an infested tree, aphids may be found on the roots in all stages in the spring. Some may be found on the trunk under loose bark or the dead bodies of those killed the previous fall. As the buds begin to open, the aphids on the trunk locate on tender new bark and commence feeding and many migrate from the roots to the top at about the same time.

Tobacco dust in trenches around the tree will kill many of the aphids and act as a repellant. The aphids may be destroyed on the limbs and trunk by spraying with 7 per cent kerosene emulsion; with a miscible oil 1 gallon to 30 or 40 gallons of water; whale oil soap, 1 pound to 1 gallons of water, or with "black leaf 40," or other equally good nicotine sulphate, 1 part in 500 parts of water. Whatever insecticide is used, it must be applied in a strong spray so as to wet thoroughly and penetrate the waxy covering of the aphids.

Root treatments are of rather doubtful value. Good orchard practice to keep the trees in a strong, healthy condition is always important. —W. P. Yetter, Jr., Deputy State Entomologist, Colorado Agricultural College.

TENTH DISTRICT U. OF M. ALUMNI

TENTH DISTRICT MEETING AT HOLLAND JUNE 26

Association of Thirty Michigan Towns Will Send Their Delegates to Meeting

University of Michigan alumni in the tenth district of Michigan are enthusiastic over plans for the tenth district meeting here June 26, it is shown in dozens of letters being received from alumni by James DePree, chairman of the reunion committee, says a Holland dispatch:

Alumni in nearly thirty Michigan towns and cities where there are local nssocintions have signified their intention of sending delegates or of electing delegates to the big meeting the last Saturday in the month and other alumni are making plans to visit Holland to enjoy the extensive program now outlined.

Most of these will bring their wives, for the hosts committee at Holland has made provisions for generous entertainment of the wives of alumni and the alumnac. Delegates from far away sections of the district are planning to make the trip to Holland Friday, June 25, so that they may attend the business session and election of district officers Saturday morning, beginning at 9 o'clock, eastern standard time. This meeting will be addressed by Hawley Tapping of Ann Arbor, field secretary for the University alumni.

At noon the men will convene for a buffet luncheon at the Holland Country club, where they will drive off at 1 o'clock in n handicnp golf tournament for all who desire to play. Details of this tournament are being worked out by a special committee and the various flights promise excitement. There will be individual nnd in addition inter-city matches.

The women will have luncheon nt the Warm Friend Tavern, a strictly modern hotel, at 1 o'clock and then will motor to the club, arrangements being in charge of Mrs. Gerrit J. Diekema and Mrs. Edward DePree, both of this city. At the club there will be an nfternoon of cards.

For those who do not wish to follow this program, the committee has made arrangements for tennis, swimming in Lake Michigan and for a visit to the well known Lakewood farm of George W. Getz, millionaire sportsman. Mr. Getz keeps a menagerie on his farm and among the attractions are a "coffee drinking" orang-outang, Japanese bears and an unusunl group of monkeys. In addition there are miles of lake frontage to be explored either by nuto or on foot through the widely known Holland and Black Lake resort section.

In the evening all delegates and other visitors, both men and women will assemble at 6:30 at Warm Friend Tavern for the climax of the occasion, a banquet at which Gerrit J. Diekema will preside. Dr. Clarence Cook Litle, president of the University of Michigan, has been invited to give the principal nddress. Other speakers will be Coach Fielding H. Yost and Arthur H. Vandenberg of Grand Rapids. Among the alumni who already have signified their intentions of nttending the reunion are Victor M. Gore, regent; Fred M. Green, Judge Leonard D. Verdier, "Germany" Schultz, Douglas Roby, Frank Steketee, Paul Goebel, "Red" Miller and a score of others well known in campus circles.

The one-day convention plans are being followed by 10,000 alumni of the university residents in the district and especially by those towns where there are alumni organizations including: Allegan, Alpena, Battle Creek, Benton Harbor, Big Rapids, Cadillac, Charlevoix, Charlotte, Cheboygan, Ionia, Jackson, Kalamnzoo, Lansing, Ludington, Manistee, Midland, Muskegon, Niles, Petoskey, Sturgis, Three Rivers, Traverse City and a host of smaller communities.

COPYRIGHT 1925 BY FIRST NATIONAL BANK, DETROIT.

The wealth of Michigan aggregates $11,405,000,000 the United States Census Bureau at Washington found in its last census of the nation's total worth. Michigan's wealth exceeds that of the whole nation less than a hundred years ago.

The sum of $5,790,000,000, or 51 per cent of the wealth of the state is represented by real estate which includes land and improvements.

The second largest item is that of Michigan factories plus the value of their output in one year. This is $2,409,000,000, or 21 per cent of the wealth of the state. The value of manufactures here is smaller than given by the Census Bureau in its survey of the state's industries. In its census, certain repetitions were eliminated.

Transportation and public utility properties have a total worth of $1,015,000,000, or 9 per cent of the state's wealth.

Personal property includes jewelry, clothing, furniture and similar articles. It is 13 per cent of the state's wealth, being valued at $1,496,000,000.

Straightline, New Condenser Scheme

Principle Now Is Regarded as Real Step Forward, Writer Says.

Not so very long ago everybody had the "low-loss" craze and nowadays everything, as far as variable condensers are concerned, must be "straightline." Many people decided that "low loss"—to put it colloquially—was the bunk, but it is generally agreed that the "straightline" principle now incorporated in many well known makes of condensers, is a real step forward. Writing in the Radio Broadcast magazine, Prof. J. H. Morecroft, past president of the Institute of Radio Engineers, goes thoroughly into the subject and explains just why the straightline-frequency condenser is a real improvement on any other type.

Difference in Loss.

"With the increase in the use of the term frequency, rather than wavelength, in radio broadcasting idens and practice, the straightline-frequency condenser has appeared on the market and there seems to be considerable misunderstanding as to what and why it is," writes Professor Morecroft.

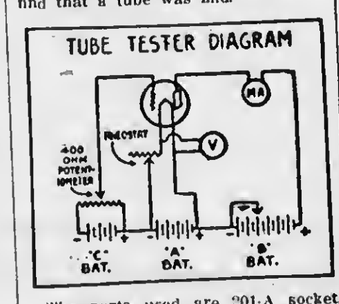
"It is not long since comment was made on the 'low-loss' condenser, a term which was invented by some astute radio business man to increase his sales. As many people pointed out at that time, some condensers do actually have lower electrical losses than others, due to better materials used for plates and insulation. But the difference is so slight that any one of a dozen reputable condensers would show up equally well when connected in a receiving set. The difference in loss of various standard condensers is so slight that accurate laboratory measurements are required to show it.

Advance in Radio Art.

"Not so, however, with the straightline-frequency condenser; the use of such a condenser in radio sets is a real advance in the radio art. The assignment of various channels to different broadcastlag stations is made because each station requires a definite number of cycles for its own use. It may be said that no station should be assigned a frequency within ten kilocycles of nnother located sufficiently close to interfere with the one in question. Thus if there were ten stations in one district they would naturally be assigned channels equally spaced in frequencies, sny ten kilocycles apart, and if the set being used is equipped with straightline-frequency condensers these stations will be found at equally spaced points on the tuning dials. With ordinary condensers, of course, this is by no means possible, for only one or two stations are found at the higher points of the scale, while at the lower end of the scale the different stations come in at points so close together that it is difficult to set accurately for them. These new condensers, however, show one station at 5, nnother at 10, another at 15, etc., all the way up the scale and their use naturally makes a set considerably easier to manipulate."

Tube Tester Is Made of Scrap Instruments

If you have n wavemeter in which a millinmmeter is employed or if you wish to go to a little expense to get one, it is a compsratively simple matter to make a tube tester out of a few scrap instrumenta that can be found around almost any laboratory. Such a device is very valuable to anyone who desires to do precision work and does not wish to spend a lot of time trying to fix a set only to find that a tube was bnd.



The parts used are 201-A socket, rheostnt, 400-ohm poteatiometer, basebonrd, wire and binding posts. In sdition to this is required an 0 to 5-

The layout of the parts is left to the builder. I might suggest that you place the meters face up. It can be wired with regulsr bus wire.

To operate connect up the batteries as designsted and insert tube in socket. A reading will be shown on the milliammeter. When the potentiometer is thrnwn to one side you will get the minimum reading and to the other you will get the maximum.—Philadelphia Record.

Care in Placing Tubes

When you place the tubes in the sockets, be careful how you handle them. Many tubes have been injured by rough usage. The tubes will not stand the rough treatment given them by many fans. The tips are sometimes broken and thus make poor contacts. Do nnt take the tubes out of the sockets any more than is absolutely necessary.

CAPTURE SUSPECTED ROBBERS

PART OF STOLEN CASH AND BONDS RECOVERED

Arrest of Two Men May Clear Up Daylight Hold-up at Elk Rapids Last July.

The daylight hold-up last July 20th of the Elk Rapids State Bank at Elk Rapids, in which a small amount of cash and betewen $35,000 and $40,000 in negotiable bonds formed the loot of two armed men who made their escape in an automobile, is believed to have been solved, avers last Monday's issue of the Grand Rapids Herald.

A list of securities found on the person of Harry Burke, 25, when he was arrested recently at Los Angeles, Cal., for participation in a large postal robbery on the const, has been received by Sheriff Fred Kamferbeck, of Ottawa county, and seems to indicate that Burke either was one of the Elk Rapids bandits or received the bonds from the ones who actually committed the robbery.

Burke, alias Harry Brackett, is said to be a pal of George J. Shipley, 35, who is now serving a life sentence in the state prison at Jackson for the $3,500.00 robbery, May 29th, 1925, of the Berlin State bank at Mnrne. Burke is alleged to have aided Shipley in the hold-up. Recent turn in affairs mny also involve Shipley in the Elk Rapids robbery.

Edward Durkee, cashier of the Elk Rapids bank, in a telephone conversation with the Herald, asserted that, while the list of bonds stolen from his bank was locked up in his office for the week-end, he was reasonably sure that most of the securities that were found in Burke's possession were taken from the vault after he and an assistant hnd been herded into an ante room at pistol point.

Several features of the Elk Rapids robbery made it unique. For one tbing it was one of the largest hold-ups in the crime annals of western Michigan. For another, the bandits were dressed in overalls to represent farmers or day laborers engaged in rough toil.

Beside the town's only bank was a horseshoe pitching court and the two bandits drove up in a ramshackle flivver and stopped to pitch a game.

Just nfter Charles Carver, president of the bank, had started home for lunch and while Mr. Durkee and his assistant, F. H. Schuler, were preparing to close for the noon hour, the two men, one tall and the other short, but both swarthy, walked in with raised revolvers.

Durkee and Schuler were herded into n back room and held there by one of the men while the other ransacked the safe and cash drawers.

After leaving the hank, the two bandits started south on M-11 toward Traverse City. At Acme, ten miles south of Elk Rnpids, their machine was seen to head east into the sparsely setled cut-over region.

For several days county officers and state police combed the "plains" of Antrim, Grand Traverse and Kalkaska counties, but to no avail. The bandits seemed to have been swallowed up by the atmosphere.

Suspects later were arrested at Kalkaska and other towns, but always these were released after they had been viewed by Durkee and Schuler. Several times the bank officials received reports from cities in the middle west that men answering to the descriptions of the bandits were being held or were under surveilance, but the actual bandits continued to elude the talons of the law.

When Shipley was arrested some six months ago in Richmond, Va., for the Marne bank holdup, which antedated the Elk Rapids robbery nearly two months, there was nothing on his person to connect him with the latter crime. Even when, a few weeks ago, news of Burke's arrest was publlshed, the accounts failed to intrigue the interest of the Elk Rapids officials, inasmuch as the source of the more than $50,000.00 stolen securities found in his possession was not divulged.

But when conversing over the telephone with a Herald reporter, Mr. Durkee identified some of the honds in the list from Los Angeles.

It was his first intimation the robbery had been solved. He asserted that, after he had consulted the bank's list, he might be able to identify more, or all of the bonds and indicated he would negotiate at once with the Los Angeles police for their return.

The bank's loss through the robbery was fully protected by insurance, Mr. Durkee said. He explained that some of the bonds were the property of patrons, who had merely turned them over to the bank for safekeeping.—Elk Rapids Progress.

MURDER TALE RAISES DOUBT

Lloyd Bailey further alleges that his two brothers then went through the fellow's pockets, taking fifty cents and a revolver, and left him by the side of the road. A motorist in passing discovered the stranger, who stated he had been beaten up by two bootleggers, gasped two or three times nnd died, states Lloyd Bailey under oath at his examination.

One Man in Prison

John Bailey is reported to be an inmnte at Jackson prison, and his brother, Roy Bailey, under suspicion by the Lansing police authorities.

Locally the story is doubted somewhat, as no notice of the finding of the alleged deceased stranger has come to the notice of Emmet county officers, and Charlevoix officials have no record of the case.

If Llody Bailey's story is true, the murder occurred on M-13 trunk line between Clarion and Boyne Falls. The investigation is being continued by state and local officers, although they are in doubt as to the truth of the statements made by Bailey.

BAPTIST CHURCH

Jesus taught his disciples that the field of the church is the whole world, and thus it follows that the true concept of Christian Mission is "My church at work in world fields." This church is rejoicing in the fact that it went "over the top" in meeting its apportionment almost 50 per cent the last year. This gives courage to think we can do even hetter the coming year, and in this way we cnn share with our great Baptist denomination in its "world wide task."

The services next Sunday will consist of preaching service in the morning. Bible school at noon, B. Y. P. U. service at 6:30 in the evening. There will be no preaching service in the evening, on account of the baccalaureate service at the Congregational church. The weekdny services will be as usual.

The tourist is in the land—not many of them yet—but more and more we hear the "Honk" of his car and suggest that he take a little time off on Sunday and visit and worship with the church of his cholce when he is at home. He cnn thus give good cheer and encouragement to his brethren in this northern country. Last Thursday evening twenty-two shared the Thursday evening prayer service. We had a good time and good fellowship. We would like to see more share this devotional hour in the middle of a stressful week of business and toil.

Our ladies are today holding their monthly Missionary meetings with a good attendance and interest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Carey.

Monday, June 7th, is the date when Dr. Leahy, the Optometrist, will be at the Hotel Charlevoix.—Adv. 22t1.

Sargent Door Closer 520

Certain doors must be closed— silently and surely

THEY are many—the doors that must be closed. Perhaps they lead to the lavatory off the hall, the cellar stairs, the refrigerator room or the back stairs. They are the storm door in winter and the screen door in summer. To have them standing open often leads to annoyance, perhaps to real danger. A threshold is no barrier to tiny feet, nor will it stop drafts and dust and noise.

For all these doors, Sargent Door Closer 520 is ideal. It is small in size—exactly suited for use on doors within the home. It is reasonable in price. It works with all the certainty and silence of the larger Sargent Door Closers you are used to seeing in public buildings, schools and offices. It is easy to apply. A plan enclosed in every box explains its use on the outside or the inside of any door. For convenience and the safety it will bring to your home, use these Closers on many doors.

EDITORS ENJOY SUMMER MEET

HARBOR SPRINGS HOST FOR THREE DAYS TO M. P. A.

Citizens Put on Gala Attire and Bend Every Effort to Make Visitors Welcome

Two hundred and sixty editors, members of the Michigan Press Association, with their wives and families, attended the 1926 summer outing at Harbor Spring June 10, 11, 12. Held in the "Naples of the North," this meeting has passed into history as the greatest gathering in the 52 years of its existence. The meeting was a magnificent tribute to a fellow member—E. J. Hanna, editor of The Emmet County Graphic—and an astonishing response to the cordial invitation extended Michigan's weekly editors by the friendly folks of Harbor Springs.

The key to the city was given President Schuyler Marshall of the association by President A. B. Backus of the Harbor Springs Chamber of Commerce, who welcomed the visitors at the initial evening banquet Thursday at the Emmet Hotel, conducted by A. J. Simpson. During the afternoon all that it stood for was generously given.

Without a miss every feature of the program as announced was carried out. From the moment the vanguard of the Fourth Estate arrived, their pleasant stay in Harbor Springs was definitely underwritten. The reception the editors received stands perhaps without parallel in the history of entertainments in Michigan sponsored by a city as a whole. If any visiting editor had money when he arrived, he might as well have left it at home. It could buy nothing in Harbor Springs—the entertainment and the address of welcome to the vanguard was given by E. C. Matthews, secretary of the Chamber of Comerce. Forty-one years ago this city entertained the M. P. A. and Thursday evening's banquet pulled up the curtain on the past. Toastmaster E. J. Hanna introduced Lorenzo A. Clark, who presided at the meeting of nearly 50 years ago. The veil from the yesterdays of pioneer days was pushed aside by this 88-year-old gentleman, the only real pioneer of a clan whose faith in this section made Harbor Spring what it is today. Walking in the deepening afternoon of a well spent, decent life, and telling of the hungering heartaches the chords of memory brought into play, Mr. Clark's story of the "old days" and the intimate things he recalled, brought tears to the eyes of his audience.

Friday's trip around the shores of Little Traverse Bay and Lake Michigan, through Good Hart, Cross Village, Mackinaw and back home, will be long remembered. Buffet lunch at Old Trail Tavern, served by Mrs. Orianna Deaton Hooker, followed an exhibition of Indian war dancing and a recital by Editor Babcock at the Indian Art Store of the heroism of Francis Ok-te-no-ti-go and Joseph Jo-ke-go-be-nes-se, recipients of Carnegie medals, for saving the lives of three fishermen off Good Hart, in Lake Michigan.

Forest Beach Inn, through the courtesy of Messrs. Sager and Reeves, on Friday night, banqueted the visitors. The feature of the evening's festivities was the lecture on psycho-analysis by Dr. Gustave A. Blumenthal, internationally famed as a character analyst, author, vocational guidance bureau builder and lecturer.

Saturday's program ended at Ramona Park hotel with a banquet and a dancing party given by Fritz Kramer, proprietor.

It was at this banquet that the association took recognizance of the wonderful hospitality and the unselfish entertainment provided by Harbor Springs hotels, merchants, citizens, and the civic organizations. The magnificent hostelries of this city, on the eve of opening for the summer season, threw their tremendous energies and resources into the work of entertaining the editors. The best of everything was provided.

The famous Wequetonsing Hotel, rich in the traditional hospitality of this region, served breakfasts to the visitors every morning, as well as housing its capacity. Ramona Park Hotel, an intriguing and artistically arranged hostelry, gave its best suite of rooms to the visitors. In a concise review of the entertaining features, and as an evidence of appreciation, the Michigan Press Association adopted, not only resolutions of appreciation, but provided a bust of Benjamin Franklin, properly inscribed, to be placed in the public library. Following are the resolutions of appreciation:

WHEREAS, The members of the Michigan Press Association, their wives and families, have been splendidly and most generously entertained by the people of Harbor Springs, its officials, civic organizations, and the proprietors of the hotels, restaurants and resorts in its vicinity, on the occasion of its annual summer meeting in 1926, therefore be it

RESOLVED, That the Michigan Press Association tender its sincere thanks and deepest appreciation to the Village of Harbor Springs, the Harbor Springs Board of Commerce and its efficient president, Mr. A. B. Backus, and enterprising secretary, Mr. E. C. Matthews; to Mr. Allen C. Angell, president of the village; to the business men of Harbor Springs; to the proprietors of the Wequetonsing Hotel, the Emmet Hotel, the Old Trail Tavern, Booth's Pavilion, the Forest Beach Inn, Juilleret's Cabaret, the Ramona Park Hotel, the Steamer America, and to all others who in any way contributed to the

MEMORIAL SERVICES CONDUCTED

W. C. T. U. MET AT BAPTIST CHURCH FRIDAY

Topic "Community Housekeeping" Discussed by Members—Outline Plan of Work Later

The June meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held last Friday afternoon at the Baptist Church with a good attendance.

A very interesting Memorial Service planned by Mrs. Alcox was conducted in her absence by Mrs. P. D. Campbell. Tribute was paid to the memory of these members who have passed away within the year, namely: Mrs. W. J. Weikel, Mrs. Alson Wood and Mrs. S. A. Correll, all of whom were active in the work until failing health prevented further participation.

The topic "Community Housekeeping" was presented by Mrs. Saltonstall. This is only housekeeping on a little larger scale than that we do in our homes and women ought to be especially interested in it for the reason that we may protect our children ever so carefully in the home but the time surely comes when the community influence will be felt in their lives.

Church co-operation, parent-teacher meetings, supervised dance halls, segregation of delinquent children, censored moving pictures, and clean literature were among the subjects presented by the leader and discussed by the members present.

A special meeting will be held in July to continue the discussion and formulate a plan of action.

A county rally with picnic supper is scheduled for August 5th, probably at Young State Park.

The next regular meeting will be held September 10th with Mrs. Swartz.

WEDDED AT EAST JORDAN LAST SATURDAY

Avis Lucile Henning Becomes Bride of Harold Byers

Charlevoix friends will be surprised to hear of the marriage of Harold Byers, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Byers of this city, to Miss Avis Lucile Henning, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Henning of East Jordan, which occurred at the bride's home in East Jordan last Saturday evening, Rev. C. W. Sidebotham of the Presbyterian church of that city performing the ceremony.

The bride is very well and favorably known in East Jordan and by her many Charlevoix friends. She has been teaching school for the past few years near Boyne Falls. The groom, who is associated with his father in the dray business here, has a large following of friends who wish them every success in their new venture.

Mr. and Mrs. Byers are now on a honeymoon trip through the southern part of the state and will return to Charlevoix soon to make their home.

NEW PLEASURE BOATS COMING

THOMSON'S AND OBERFELDER'S YACHTS HEAD LIST

With Organization of Boat Club, Interest in Boating Will Be Keen

Charlevoix's already large fleet of pleasure craft will be enlarged soon by the arrival of three new boats belonging to summer visitors, which are expected this week or next.

Joe King, Chicago Club resorter, will have a new sailboat. A Gar-Wood cruiser is on the way here for Mr. Wilcox, who resorts at Beulah, and a speed boat for Mr. Talman, who purchased the Windsor Aldrich property last fall. Julius Gilbert has had his speed boat, the Laura B, refinished and installed a new, higher powered motor.

Joseph Oberfelder of Chicago, who has made Charlevoix his summer home for a great many years, has purchased a new 128-foot yacht, which is the largest private yacht in commission on the great lakes. Mr. Oberfelder, with a party of friends, are now on a fishing trip in upper peninsula waters. The boat will probably make Chicago her home port, but will visit Charlevoix a number of times this summer, the first trip some time this week, according to Frank Sears, who received a telegram from Charles Rice, a member of the fishing party, to have bait ready for them here on their arrival. Logan Thomson's new yacht, the Sylvia, will probably arrive here some time in July.

On a trial trip made Decoration Day, the Miss Charlevoix, owned by M. Roy Brady, negotiated a mile course in 59 seconds, a little better than sixty miles per hour. The motor in the craft has been set back six inches during the winter, which has added greatly to the speed of the boat. Mr. Brady is now making plans to enter his boat in the Mississippi Valley Power Boat Association regatta to be held at Louisville, Kentucky, July 4th. It is hoped that his plans will be successful, as the value of the advertising we would get from his entry with excellent chances of winning could hardly be estimated.

With the organization of the new boat club, interest in motor boating and speed boat racing will be keen this season.

HAVE AGENCY FOR DODGE WATERCARS

Hamilton & Son Distributors for Charlevoix and Emmet Counties

Announcement has been made by the Horace E. Dodge Boat Works, Inc., of their appointment of Hamilton & Son, local boat builders, as distributors for the Dodge Watercars in Charlevoix and Emmet counties.

The west end of their work shop will be devoted to the display of the watercars, also a stock of new rowboats they have built recently. Several of these fine little boats have been sold so far this spring and they are proving popular with local sportsmen and summer visitors. Two of the new watercars are expected to arrive this week and they will be on display in their show room.

SEEK SEAT IN STATE SENATE

INDIAN RIVER MAN ANNOUNCES CANDIDACY

Says He Is an Ardent Supporter of Governor Alex J. Groesbeck and His Policies

C. A. Campbell, of Indian River, has announced his candidacy for the state senate. Petitions for his nomination on the Republican ticket are now being circulated. Mr. Campbell is highly respected and, although he has been a lifelong Republican, he has never been a candidate for office.

For many years Mr. Campbell was a brakeman and conductor on the M. C. railroad. A few years ago he purchased lime stone lands near Afton and began taking out the stone there and selling it to the sugar and other factories. His operation was a success from the beginning and now he has a large quarry and employs many men the year round and does a large business.

His announcement follows:

"To the electors of this senatorial district:

"In accordance with the wishes expressed to me by many of the good citizens of this and other counties in this senatorial district, I am announcing my candidacy for the nomination on the Republican ticket for state senator.

"I am a thorough believer in Northern Michigan and will support every worthy measure that tends to its development and good. The splendid road and transportation program in upper Michigan of the present administration should receive the backing of every citizen of this district, and I shall support as well every other measure of Governor Groesbeck for progress, whose untiring energies for the state's benefit I heartily commend.

"It will be my earnest endeavor, if nominated and elected, to represent the entire district and every citizen in it; to work for unity and harmony in the district, for our interests are all common; and to promote and advance the welfare of Northern Michigan and its people. We have a wonderful country here and it will do the rest of the people of this state good to know just how good our northern country is.

"C. A. Campbell."

MARRIAGE JUNE 2nd IS ANNOUNCED HERE

Miss Druscilla Richardson Weds Glenn Brennen in Chicago

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Richardson of Norwood, have announced the marriage of their daughter, Druscilla, to Mr. Glenn Brennen, formerly of East Jordan, the ceremony being solemnized at Chicago, June 2nd.

The bride is very well known and popular here in Charlevoix, having been employed in the local telephone exchange for a number of years, and the groom is well and favorably known here and at East Jordan.

Mr. and Mrs. Brennen have located at Hammond, Ind., where the groom is employed by a railroad company. Their many friends join in wishing them a long and prosperous wedded life.

FIRST BAND CONCERT ON SATURDAY EVENING

Regular Out-door Concerts Thursday Evenings After This Week

The Charlevoix City Band will give their first out-door concert of the season on Saturday evening of this week at eight o'clock, on Bridge street at the corner of Bridge and Clinton.

The boys have been practising throughout the winter months and have added many new selections to their program. The concert held recently at the Baptist church was very successful and well rendered. The Saturday evening concert will prove a good drawing card for the merchants of the city and with this fact in view the business men should co-operate in every way with band activities.

After Saturday evening, concerts will be held on Thursday evening at the corner of Mason and State streets until the new band stand in the city park on Bridge Street is completed. The Band boys look forward to an active and successful season.

ALL SEED BEANS NEED TESTING

GERMINATION WAS INJURED BY LATE SEVERE FREEZES

Secretary Bean Jobbers' Association Issues Warning to All Bean Growers

Warning that Michigan seed beans are of such poor quality this spring that testing for germination is advisable before any seed stock is planted is being sent out from Lansing by Prof. J. F. Cox, head of the crops department at the Michigan State College.

The wet fall of the past year, followed by severe freezes, injured germination seriously, it is said. F. B. Dreese, secretary of the Michigan Bean Jobbers' Association, found in recent tests that cars of seed beans rated as "choice hand-picked" showed some germination below 50 per cent, with one car actually running only four per cent.

That there will apparently be no large holdover of white pea beans this year is said to be indicated by reported strong movements of Michigan beans. This should mean better price conditions for white beans than prevailed during the past season, if a crop of good quality is raised this year, according to Professor Cox.

Suggestion that it is wise for Michigan farmers to "ease up" on plantings of red kidney beans this year is also made by Cox. Officers of the Bean Jobbers' Association are said to predict that the state acreage of red kidneys will be doubled this year, as a result of the fact that these beans have brought a higher price for several years than the white navy pea bean.

Danger of over-production of red kidney beans if this tendency keeps up is indicated. Many are also said to be planting kidney bean seed of very poor quality, carrying the "pale sport, or fading bean."

In view of the relatively poor condition of seed stocks, Professor Cox is advising heavier seedings this year—from five to seven pecks of red kidneys and from three pecks to a bushel of white pea beans per acre.

YOUNG LOCAL MAN MARRIED MONDAY

Fred Norton and Miss Nina Mattson Wed at Grayling

Fred Norton, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Norton of this city, and Miss Nina Mattson, daughter fo Mr. and Mrs. John Mattson of Mancelona, were married last Monday morning by the Rev. Baughn, pastor of the Methodist church at Grayling.

Mr. Norton was manager of the local Western Union office last winter and will be employed there this summer as operator. Mrs. Norton is quite well known here, having worked here during several summers and visited here numerous times. For the past few years she has been teaching school at Birch Run, near Saginaw.

The young couple will make their home in this city and have the best wishes of their many friends.

FAIR WILL OPEN SEPTEMBER 14

WEDNESDAY THE BIG DAY FOR SCHOOL CHILDREN

This Year Bids Fair to Be the Biggest Success Yet—Fair Officials Working Hard

Plans for the 1926 Charlevoix County Fair are well under way and an effort is being made to surpass if possible the big success of 1925.

It is sometimes thought that the promoting of a fair like the Charlevoix County Fair is a matter of a couple weeks' work. Attempts have been made in some places to run fairs that way and as a result have been so far in the hole that exhibitors often could not collect premiums and the fair has died n natural death.

Officers of the Charlevoix County Fair association, however, believe in keeping on the job the year round always looking for features which they believe would be in the best interests of the local fair. Throughout the winter and spring months, right up until fair time, farm produce, school and community exhibits, are being lined up, the best attractions and races being booked and every effort being put forth to give the county a real fair.

This year bids fair to be the biggest success yet. Practically all space in the floral hall has been taken for exhibits. Free attractions such as Marvelous Daro, Betty's Pets, dogs and ponies, a good display of fireworks, the merry-go-round, Ferris wheel, four bands, two playing each day, will entertain the visitors. And there will be the usual exhibitions of the Boys' and Girls' Calf Clubs, which in itself draws hundreds to the grounds.

Wednesday will be the big day for all the school kids in Charlevoix county, and the school exhibition building will be crowded to capacity. Over a thousand free tickets to school children have been given to those attaining the prescribed average standings in their studies the past school year.

Other attractions will add to the gayety of the occasion and those who attend the fair this year will be more pleased than ever with the work of the fair officials. A change has been made this year in the number of days of the fair. Instead of four days, the fair will run only three, starting with Tuesday, September 14, and ending Thursday, September 16.

RECEIVES DEGREE OF MASTER OF ARTS

Father and Daughter Graduate With Honors Same Week

At the annual commencement of Northwestern University, the degree of Master of Arts was conferred upon Rev. Cecil E. Pollock, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church at Charlevoix.

He completed his class work for this degree last summer, having given several summers of work in attendance at the University. His thesis subject was "The Lord's Supper," in the new testment, and the book was principally a critical exegesis of the scriptural accounts of this Christian Rite from the Greek records.

Mr. Pollock is a graduate of Albion College with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and a member of the Michigan annual conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, having served pastorates in Otsego and Kalamazoo, Michigan. His daughter, Cecile Louise Pollock, aged 16, graduated from the Charlevoix High School last Thursday, thus making the week a real commencement season for both father and daughter.

FOWLER TAKES AGENCY FOR NASH CARS

Thanking the Women of Charlevoix

The housewives of Charlevoix have been hard at it, early and late, for weeks, making ready a proper welcome for Charlevoix's summer visitors.

This welcome of theirs is a thorough one. They have painted and varnished, swept and scrubbed, beaten and dusted and let in the Spring sun and air.

It is a wonder that our merchants have a broom or a can of Dutch Cleanser left in stock.

For my part, I owe the women of Charlevoix much, and I thank them here and now. The many cottages they have placed with me for rental certainly do shine like a schoolboy's face on Monday morning!

We had scarce finished these preparations when the Walrus reappeared and tacked up the anchorage to the elbow where it bends sharply around the larger island which covers the entrance. Further she was unable to go because of shoal water. Her people seemed to be concerned entirely with the task of disembarkation, and in the space of a glass we reckoned that all of a hundred and fifty men were landed and straggled irregularly into the forest.

The afternoon was warm and drowsy. The Walrus looked like a toy ship on the oily-smooth surface of the inlet. There was not a sign of life aboard her, and the forest that spread betwixt us and the shore hugged silently whatever secrets it covered.

My great-uncle frowned thoughtfully.

"This is not like Flint," he remarked. "He must always fly bull-headed to the attack."

The words were hardly out of his mouth when a shout came from the side of the stockade fronting the inlet.

"Here be Flint's Redhead!"

Forth from the forest will projected the unmistakable flaming locks of Darby McGraw, with one arm which flourished diligently what once had been a white shirt. At the first glimpse of me he scrambled into the open.

"Will ye be letting me come in, Master Bob?" he called. "I ha' a message for himself."

"Who?"

"Himself—him that's uncle to ye."

"Well, seeing that we hear each other excellently as we are, suppose you speak your message from the spot you stand on," I said.

"Troth, that will suit me fine," he replied with alacrity. "And 'tis easy said. Flint will ha' Cap'n Murray shift the treasure to the foot of the hill, and that done, the Walrus will take it and go. If he won't, we'll be takin' it anyways—or by chance we don't, we'll blow the James out o' the water and leave ye all marooned."

I looked down inquiringly at my great-uncle.

"If they seek terms, they are uncertain of success," he said. "Send the boy away."

"But if they destroy the James?"

"First they will attack—and after that we will deal with the problem of protecting the ship."

And as I hesitated—

"Be so good as to answer him at once, Robert, or I shall have him shot as he stands."

"Go back, Darby," I called. "Captain Murray will have none of your offer."

"God save us!" he exclaimed involuntarily. "I'm thinkin' that will be the death of many a tall feller, Master Bob. Well, good luck to ye and to Master Peter and the elegant young madd. If we all come out safe—"

My great-uncle leaped upon a tree-stump and fired a pistol over Darby's head. The boy stood motionless a moment, mouth agape.

"The old devil!" he howled then, and fled down the hillside for all he was worth.

Flint did not wait to receive Murray's verbal answer; that pistol-shot was sufficiently explicit. Three musket-shots echoed it from the foot of the hill, and at once there was a renewed hustle of men on the fo'csle of the Walrus. A puff of white smoke blew up from the deck, and the crack of a long twelve started myriads of sea-birds from the seaward marshes. The shot sang over us and crashed into the forest beyond. The other chase-gun bowled a shot into the enclosure, where it simply buried itself in the soft sand.

The carronades were unable to reach the blockhouse with their heavier shot, and the Long Toms lacked the power to penetrate the green wood of the walls. Most of the round-shot plumped into the sand. Three posts of the stockade were knocked over and promptly set up again. That was all. When darkness intervened and the firing ceased we felt that we had been the winners of the first bout of the struggle.

In the meantime we had not seen a trace of the landing-party from the Walrus and as the night shut down we all peered curiously through the posts of the stockade, expecting momentarily to discover a rush of crowding figures. But hour after hour passed without a sound to disturb the silence, and even Murray, whose nerves were of forged steel, became uneasy as he upended the hour-glass for the third time since sunset and dodged to inspect the circuit of the defenses.

"There is another hand than Flint's behind these Fabian tactics," he observed. "Perhaps John Silver's. 'Tis a clever rogue, and a cunning. We cannot be too vigilant."

Coupeau joined us on the southern arc of the stockade. On the north side we came to a pit which was empty, and in the next one to it a man lay on his stomach as if asleep.

Murray prodded him with his sword, and the fellow groaned, but did not stir.

"What is the matter with this man?" demanded my great-uncle.

"Please, zur, 'tis Job Pytchens," answered the man next beyond.

"I asked what was the matter with him, said my great-uncle coldly.

"He'm wur one o' they as had a hun'erd 'n' fifty lashes, cap'n, zur."

I shuddered. My great-uncle took snuff.

"And who is gone from this vacant place?" he pressed.

"Tom Morphew, zur. He'm dead, zur."

"Was he shot?"

"No, zur, cap'n. He's had a hun'erd 'n' fifty lashes, too."

"Where is he?"

"Please, zur, us buried him," the man answered.

"Where?"

The man waved an arm vaguely over the sandy top of the hill.

"Ah! Well, you will leave unburied the next man who dies, be he Job or another—else I shall have the cat administered to all of you who have abandoned your posts without permission."

"'Iss, zur. Thank 'ee, zur," replied the man—but there was no thanks in his snarling voice; his face was masked by the darkness.

"Stop me," said Murray, turning away, "but these rascals are becoming as slack as Flint's tattertails!"

Across the clearing a musket exploded. Then another and another. A volley crackled from the lower slopes, and our men replied. A hoarse yelling underscored the firing.

"At last!"

Murray's voice vibrated with exultation.

"Now we shall scoop the rogues like so many grains of sand. The fools! A night attack is fatal with undisciplined men."

A great roar of firing burst out upon the northern front of the stockade, and mingled with the reports of the muskets were shouts of:

"Down arms, Jameses!"

"Step aside, James lads!"

"All we want is old Murray!"

And a wailing voice cried over and over again—

"Here be Tom Morphew 'n' his bloody back, mates!"

The firing sputtered and dwindled and was succeeded by a prodigious scuffling and clatter of cutlasses.

"We'll do 'ee no harm, Jameses!"

And now I recognized Silver's voice.

"Strike arms, Jameses!"

Three men, one of them with a broken arm, raced up to us.

"Long John's in," sobbed one.

"Tom Morphew let 'em in," panted a second.

"Excellently planned," drawled Murray.

I heard the click of his snuffbox.

"Yet observe how fate hath tricked our opponents," he went on. "They timed their second attack to catch me on the southern side of the stockade, whereas it happens I am strategically disposed to exploit the disorder which attends their success. I think we shall teach the clever Master Silver a lesson."

"Yes, if your men are loyal," I said angrily.

"Any crew are loyal in victory, Robert," he answered.

"Ja," spoke Peter, "but you better not let dot feller talk about his bloody back."

"You are squeamish, it seems, Peter," murmured my great-uncle. "Well, I shall even seek to humor you. Coupeau!"

His voice hardened.

"Oui, m'sieu."

The gunner stepped from the huddled ranks of the aftergnard.

"We attack."

But indeed the attack was made upon us. We had not advanced four paces from the shelter of the blockhouse when fifty of the invaders stormed out of the night, howling and waving their cutlasses. We fired one smashing volley that dropped a fourth of them, and charged. A few pistol-shots met us, but most of the Walrus' men had discarded their muskets, preferring to fight sailor-fashion with the cutlass, and they were utterly disheartened by the unexpectedness of the reception we gave them.

Murray's slender dress-sword was a bodkin of death which pricked a path through the densest ranks. On one side of him Peter swung a clubbed musket which shattered heads and limbs at every step. On his other side Coupeau wielded a cutlass with equal effect.

A yellow crescent moon was riding over the treetops, and we halted in the gap the attackers had torn in the stockade to survey our situation by its light. Half-way down the hill a group of the Walrus' men rallied and commenced to fire up at us; and Coupeau was for pushing after them, but my great-uncle checked him.

"No, no, Coupeau! Yonder is John Silver, astraddle of the stockade. See, he is helping up another fellow. They have been cut off by our charge, and, if you please, we'll deal with them first."

Yonder is John Silver, Astraddle of the Stockade.

I will admit a pang of sympathy for Silver. He was not more than twenty yards from us and by dint of well-nigh incredible efforts, with the other man to hoost him, he had succeeded in scaling the stockade and was sitting there, with his one leg dangling inside. When we discovered him he started to swing his leg over the top, evidently intending to abandon his companion. But whether because of something the other man said or because he feared he must injure himself in dropping the eight feet to the ground without anyone to check his fall, he abruptly changed his mind and faced about toward us very resolutely, seizing hold of the crutch which hung from his neck by its thong.

The man at the foot of the stockade gathered himself together like a coiling serpent and plucked a long knife from his belt. He had been in the shadow until then, but now the moonlight shone over his torso and we recognized him for the blind man, Pew. He had lost his green eye-shade and his pock-marked face was cadaverous in the yellow glow. His eyes were open, and they seemed to smolder dully as they strained at us. His knife glinted in his hand.

"Will you be assisted down and be hanged whole, or must we cut you down, Silver?" hailed Murray.

He, like the rest of us, ignored the blind man. Our attention was fixed upon Silver, his broad face very calm in the moonlight.

"Them there ain't exackly tempting terms, Cap'n Murray, sir," Silver answered temperately. "Couldn't ye be a mite more generous?"

"I am serving you a dish no more highly sauced than that you intended for me," returned my great-uncle dryly.

"Now, sir; now, sir," remonstrated Silver. "How can ye say that? All we done was to try and persuade ye to give us our share o' the treasure—you havin' eight hundred thousand pound stowed away special, accordin' to your own story. And if we come in by the back door a'ter it, why that was so's we'd hurt ye least."

"You'd argue yourself to a block of ice in hell, Silver," rejoined my great-uncle unmoodily. "Throw down that crutch! Drop that knife you, sirrah, Pew—or whatever your name is!"

Sword in hand, he advanced ahead of the rest of us, who were strung out all the way from the gap in the stockade. Coupeau was at his elbow, and Peter and I close behind.

"Come," he adjured them a second time. "I'm in no mood to talk terms, and if you delay 'twill make your end the more painful."

Silver's face went livid in the moonlight.

"Aye," rasped the one-legged man, "ye'll lash us bloody-raw like the lads as let us in tonight."

THE STATE POLITICAL CAMPAIGN

What looks like it is going to be an intense political campaign has been launched in Michigan for the governship of the state. Governor Groesbeck has announced himself as a candidate for his own succession. Those who do not believe in his programs have presented Mr. Fred W. Green, of Ionia, as a contestant with him. Whether the field will be enlarged later on by new candidates is not now apparent. There will be little need of such enlargement, because the two gentlemen already named are quite competent to keep the public interested without any external assistance.

It is really a good thing for the state that the disputed policies of state management have been given such distinguished representation. That there have been disputes about state policies, wholly outside the ranks of those who are personally, professionally or otherwise interested in politics goes without saying. During the past five years there have been some marked changes in the political administration of the state. First of all has come the control of the state's affairs by an administrative board. Incidentally, while the extent of the powers of such board have been gravely criticised, as well as the fact of its existence, there seems to be no dispute between the principal contenders for the executive office about the desirability of such a system. Governor Groesbeck had it created, so he must be satisfied with it. Mr. Green has been quoted as maintaining that the system is a good one, and that he will be for continuing it. The dispute over this subject must, therefore, be considered as limited to the extent of the powers which that body should enjoy. Among these powers are some that seem to amount to a practical nullification of the right of the legislature to control the purposes for which money raised by taxation is to be spent. Whether it be Gov. Groesbeck or Gov. Green who is to rule the state in 1927 or 1928, it should be made very clear that money raised by taxation should be spent for the exact purpose which was in the minds of the legislators and no other.

There has been a great to-do raised about the operation of the parole system and the governor's responsibility therefor. As we know the law, the parole system is practically self-executing. A person convicted of crime under the undeterminate sentence system is entitled to consideration for parole when he has served his minimum sentence. Considerntion of the recomendations of sentencing judges comes after that fact. It is all a matter of record. Outside cases which are treated in the normal way, there are often reasons why leniency should be shown. We have usually observed that the people who denounce leniency to persons convicted of crime become very mellow on the subject when the beneficiaries of leniency are persons who are their own relatives or friends even to a remote degree. These people belong to the class who think the operations of the law, favorable and unfavorable, are intended for some other folks than their own.

The cost of state roads has been raised as an isue. Perhaps the campaign will illuminate that question. If state roads have cost more than they should in the past, they should cost less in the future. But state ronds will continue to be built in the future, regardless of who is governor. If they can be properly built for less money they should be. There is none too much money for the purpose at the very best.

One satisfactory characteristic of the present campaign is that of the personnel of the contenders. The best possible exponent of the present system is Gov. Groesbeck, because he is responsible for most of it. The best possible exponent of the opposition thereto is Mr. Green, because he is a good business man, a good citizen and a good executive of his home city, and he had the "guts" to go when a good many more vociferous critics of existing conditions were timid.—Michigan Manufacturer and Financial Record.

At last accounts many of the wage slaves whose hard lot is so pitied by the revolutionists, were trying to decide what kind of n car to buy this spring.

Did you know that ancient people placed the bull, ram, and goat in the stars as deities worthy of worship.

NEW CALF CLUB WAS ORGANIZED

Five Boys Now Owners of Pure-Bred Jersey Calves

The greatest event in the lives of several young boys took place May 29th, when five high quality Pure-bred Jerseys were distributed and became the property of new owners.

The following boys are the proud owners of the new Jerseys:

W. F. Wurn, East Jordan.
Bruce Sanderson, East Jordan.
Ernest Brown, Ironton.
Arnold Smith, East Jordan.
Alfred Larsen, Enst Jordan.

These bred heifers and calves came from a herd of seventeen years constructive breeding, having fine production and Jersey type that cannot be beat anywhere in the State. They were selected by County Agent Mellencamp during the three-day trip in the southern part of the state and were here and delivered in exactly one day's time from the time they left Allegan county, which can be considered as a speedy trip.

In connection with buying dairy animals it must be said, one has to travel far and wide to secure desirable stock. The southern part of the state has been covered from one side to the other by out of state buyers and the result is that everything has been picked up that is offered for sale.

In addition to the above mentioned members there will be several others who will have their calves placed this week and a complete report of calf club members will be made at a later date. With fourteen members from last year's club and the new members this year, it is thought that a fine record will be made and a fine exhibit at the County Fair.

AT THE MOVIES

Tellegen Says Olive Borden Is Young Duse

The new Duse has been discovered. And, oddly enough, she has been found in the youngest of the dramatic arts—motion pictures.

She is Olive Borden, the beautiful, vivacious, temperamental little actress who has just been placed under n long-term contract hy Fox Films, and is appearing in "Yellow Fingers," at the Palace Theatre, Monday and Tuesday.

Exciting Underworld Story at Palace

"Black Paradise," an exciting story of the underworld produced for Fox Films under the direction of R. William Neill, comes to the Palace Theatre Friday.

Madge Bellamy, Leslie Fenton and Edmund Lowe, are featured in the leading roles. They are supported by Paul Panzer, Edward Piel, Harvey Clarke, Doris Lloyd and Sam Blum.

Dog Learns English for Picture Work

He understood two languages when barely four years old!

He is Peter The Great, celebrated dog star whose latest production is "Wild Justice," made by John W. Considine, Jr., for United Artists Corporation and booked for next Wednesday and Thursday at the Palace Theatre.

Peter The Great was born in Germany. His parents were titled members of dogdom aristocracy, and his family tree goes back twenty generations. He was reared in Germany and tnught to understand the German tongue.

In 1923, when he came to America, he wns selected for motion picture prominence—but he did not understand the English language and no director could be found who was nble to direct him in German.

Call "Tumbleweeds" Greatest Hart Film

When it is reflected that, on one scene alone for William S. Hnrt's "Tumbleweeds," which comes to the Palace Theatre next Saturday and Sunday more than $100,000 worth of cameras were used, fully nineteen being trained on the action, it can be judged that this is one of the world's greatest western pictures. It is Hart's own production for United Artists Corporation release, and is his greatest effort in the eleven years of his successful screen career.

The great scene referred to is the land rush which duplicates that which took place thirty-six years ago at the Cherokee Strip between Kansas and Oklahoma. Hundreds of wngons, people, horses and mules were utilized in this great dash—the most thrilling ever depicted for a picture nnywhere.

METHODIST CHURCH
C. E. Pollock, Minster

"True To Our Home" is the Sunday school theme for the 9:30 a. m. study next Sunday. The early morning study hour is proving more and more popular with church people, and it is hoped that a much larger ntendance than usually is present in summer will find it desirable to boost the Sunday school this summer. This arrangement makes it possible to have Sunday dinner about noon, and leaves the afternoon for other wholesome purposes.

COMMUNICATIONS

Under this heading matters of interest to Charlevoix and vicinity will be discussed. It is intended for n fnir and impartial discussion, and personal matters will be eliminated. A subject of much interest to the people of the entire county wns opened last week by an article in the Courier under the caption "Ironton Ferry Is Expected Sunday." Our remarks on the charging of toll seems to have stirred up a hornet's nest in certain quarters. It is a question to be solved. A general discussion should reveal to an extent the sentiment nmong our taxpayers, as if a toll is not charged, the taxpayers will pay the shot. If you are interested in this subject, voice your opinion in these columns, whether you nre "for the toll or agin' it."—But please do not get personnl, for if you do, your nrticle will be consigned to the waste basket.—Editor.

June 12, 1926.

Editor Charlevoix Courier:

"Your article of June 9th in regard to the Ironton Ferry. Would like to say a few words. The Ironton Ferry is not at all the place to cut expenses. I think if members of the board of supervisors had to pay some of the appropriation bills they allow, our taxes would be far less than they are now.

"Now about chnrging toll on the ferry. It is true there are a lot of people in the enstern pnrt of the county who never cross the ferry. This might also apply to the Charlevoix bridge and also the bridge at East Jordan. So, if you want to collect toll, why not toll these bridges as well? There is just as much sense to one as the other. (The writer has evidently overlooked, or is ignorant of the fact that the City of Charlevoix pays all operation and upkeep expenses of the Charlevoix bridge with the exception of $1,200, which is paid by the county at large.)

"Now I think the ferry could be run much cheaper if it was looked after closer. For instance: When the ferry crosses over, let it lay there until they see a car or rig coming instead of going right back. The way it has been, it would go over and right back and perhaps before it landed, a rig would be on the other side, then they would hnve to go right back empty. There have been dozens of trips like these made for nothing.

"Now there is no use to put so much money in the ferry if you are going to charge toll, for if you charge toll, most of the traffic will go round. I have heard dozens of them say they would go around rather than pay toll, and the people on the other side will do their trading at other places rather than pny toll.

H. E. Coblentz."

What comment we will make on Mr. Coblentz's statements will be covered in a later article.—Ed.

Look First

The only quick-cooking oats with this flavor is "Quick Quaker"

FLAVOR is the all-important point in food. In oats it is probably more important than in any other.

That is why people who once taste the toasty richness of Quaker Oats are spoiled thereafter for all others.

Quaker flavor is unique, toasty and delightful. No other oats offers it to you. Some 50 years were spent perfecting it.

Quaker milling, too, retains much of the "bulk" of oats. And that makes laxatives less often needed. Protein, carbohydrates, and vitamines and this "bulk" are thus combined to make Quaker Oats an excellently balanced ration.

For your own sake, say "Quaker" when buying oats. Two kinds now at groceries: Quick Quaker (cooks in 3 to 5 minutes) and Quaker Oats as always.

Mr. Henry, our genial neighbor, has just finished driving a well for E. Vanderstreet. Depth 160 feet.

The program held last Fridny evening netted about $25.00. A fine program was enjoyed by all.

Several from here attended the normal school exercises at the Charlevoix M. E. church last Wednesday evening.

The Sunday schools of this district will hold their annual program and picnic on July 4th, at Eastport, on the Gleaner grounds.

Wesley Joliffe, who has attended normal school nt Charlevoix the past year, states that most of the class of seventeen have their schools for next year. This speaks well for Charlevoix normal.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS
by B. C. Mellencamp

Hay Making Demonstration

Plans nre being rapidly made for the big hay making demonstration to be conducted by experts of M. S. C. on July 6th. The farm of J. H. Noble, one mile south and west of Advance on the East Jordan road has been selected as being as central for the entire county as possible and having the proper set-up for this big event.

Handling Michigan's Most Valuable Crop

The hay crop is the most valuable crop grown in Michigan, and at the same time one of the most neglected. During the last ten years, the average value of this crop exceeded that of any other. V. H. Church, State Crops Statistician, reports that the hay crop was worth $57,069,000 per year to the State of Michigan; this exceeded its nearest rival, corn, which is valued at $52,855,000.

Save $5.00 to $10.00 Per Ton

Michigan's huy crops are highly perishable goods and must be handled with some degree of judgment if one is to obtain the best results. Improper curing and handling methods are responsible for a large portion of the poor quality hay that is produced. This means a direct loss to the grower, not only in a lower grade hay if he desires to sell on the commercial market, which often results in his securing $5 to $10 a ton less than market prices for good hay, but also an actual loss in the feeding value nf the hay.

In these northern states, the hay crops are one of the most basic crops grown on the farm. Without such a crop upon which to base rations for livestock, much of the profits from such an industry would be erased. Crops unusually high in that much desired food factor, protein, need to be handled so that very little, if any, of this material is lost.

The character of alfalfa, having a comparatively small leaf surface with large succulent stems, makes it one of the hardest crops to handle without loss of its valuable properties.

Quality of Hay

Quality of alfalfa hay is the same as in any hay, but the retention of its green color and of its leaf surface are two vital factors in feeding value of this legume. Alfalfa hay must be thoroughly cured so that the stems are dry, otherwise one secures such results commonly called "Mow Burning" with which alfalfa growers are altogether too familiar.

New methods of curing hay have been developed which take into consideration these factors that do make up "quality" hay. This system is especially effective in handling alfalfa, since it is a little harder a crop to handle successfully than those grown more commonly. Hay making demonstrations by the Farm Crops Department of the Michigan State College take each step in the handling of alfalfa, from cutting until the hay is cured. These "Hay Days" have been unusually successful in creating interest in better quality hay. It also gives anyone an unusual opportunity of seeing the different hay tools from several prominent implement companies working side by side.

It is expected that the dnte set for this Hay Making Demonstration will be about right for this year's condltions, but there is a bare possibility that a change in dates will be necessary, so watch the papers for further announcements and make your plans to be there.

Will the person who borrowed our cross-cut saw please return it. Charlevoix Lumber Co.—Adv. 23t2pd

DEATH FOLLOWED SERIOUS OPERATION

Mrs. Emma Barber Dies at Hospital June Second

Mrs. Emma Barber, wife of Emrey Barber formerly of this city but for the past 12 years a resident of Saginaw, died Wednesday morning, June 2, at the Charlevoix Hospital, following an operation performed on the 22nd of May.

Deceased was the daughter of the late Henry Clark, and was born in this city 37 years ago. She will be greatly missed by her husband, who was with her at the time of death, and numerous relatives and friends.

Funeral services were held from the residence of D. S. Turner, 408 West Lincoln street, last Saturday afternoon, conducted by her pastor, Rev. E. Richards of the M. P. church of Saginaw. Several friends of the deceased from Saginaw were present at the last sad rites.

Freeman Huntley's Orchestra will play at the opening dance at the Oldham Club, Friday evening, June 18. —Adv. 24t1

BAPTIST CHURCH

At the Northern Baptist convention at Washington in May it was decided that from October 1st to March 31st there should be a moratorium on money raising, an agreement to declare an armistice on controversy, and a rededication of the denominational machinery and agencies to the one task of winning men to Christ. We are sure that a profound "amen" has gone up from the whole denomination, and a nation-wide effort to win men to Him and a better life here and hereafter will justify its existence. There is no justification for the existence of a church that becomes simply a religious club. Sunday morning the theme of the sermon will be "The Trial of Abraham" and in the evening, "The Value of Courage." We are pleased with the steady dependable congregations that have been atending these services.

The Bible school enjoyed a delightful Children's Day program last Sunday and have decided not to attempt another in competition with Comencement-week in the public schools. The school will study "Juduh's Plea" and we hope all members will be present next Sunday. The Ladies are meeting to-day with Miss Correll and enjoying a large attendance.

The pastor addressed a large congregation at the Federated church at Eastport last Sunday afternoon, and was delighted with their musical program.

OVER 100 GARMENTS EXHIBITED

ACHIEVEMENT DAY AT BOYNE CITY A SUCCESS

Clarion Young Mao Awarded Hooor of Beiog County Champion io Haodicraft Work

The first County Achicvement for club members and ladies' Clothing extension Workers, held at Boyne City, June 16th, was a great auccess in every way.

To begin with the weather was fine, the program of exceptional merit, and the attendance all tbat could be hoped for.

A busier place could not be found than in the community building during the forenoon where some odd 100 garments were brought in and placed on exhibit on all sides of the big room. By 11:30 everything was in rendiness and the visitors departed for the City Park where tables and benches had been arranged for the best of all—good old-fashioned picnic dinner. Within a very short time the food in sight had been defeated, lemonade routed, and plates wreeked and all had returned to the Community Bullding anticipating the start of the program.

The first portion of the program was devoted to the Club members in the Hsndicraft and Clothing Clubs, who have recently finlshed their winter program. Miss Sylva Wlxson, Ass't State Club Leader, gave a very inspiring discussion of the wonderful work being done by club members in Canning Clubs and Clothing Clubs, followed by a talk by our State Club Leader, A. G. Kettunen, on the aims nnd results of this phase of extension work throughout the state. Probably the most pleasing pnrt of the program was the splendid and capable manner in which Miss Kntherine Wangeman, who as chairman conducted the program. She is one of the most enthusiastic club members of the county and was eounty canning champion last year and has developed much executive ability. Several mothers stated that if club work was instrumentsl in doing thnt for young people they wanted to get their children enrolled. Willnrd Minier, champion of the Mnple Grove Handicrnft Club, gave a very pleasing little talk about his elub and in additlon played two selections on a mouth organ. The exhibit from the Clarion Handicrnft Club was of exceptionnl merit and received much favorable comment.

Miss Margaret Harris, extension specialist of M. S. C., gave n very interesting talk concerning the results of this year's work In the clothing project, as well as a short outline of the important lessons given during the course. The workmaushlp contained In many new garments of various kinds made by the members of the project, offered proof of the benefits received by tnking this ndvantage of the opportunity to learn more about sewing.

The valuc of the work was better understood, when, after compiling records, it was noted that 41 meetings were held by the 25 leaders with attendance of 363 ladies. One hundred forty-one new garments were made, using the suggestlons from the instructions and tbe total of 149 people were reached other than those enrolled.

The next speaker on the program was Miss Julia Brekke, Ass't State Demonstration Agent Leader, who explained what was being offered by tbe college to the women of the atate. The home is the backbone of the nation and the college is endeavoring by this means to make farm life more attractive and a better place to live in.

Several musical selections were given during the program, including violin duets by William Morehouse and Alfred Sarasin and a danee by Miss Shaffer and Misa Hartnell, accompanied by Mrs. Bissell, which completed a program that was an inspiration to the 150 people in attendance and that will not be forgotten.

Lester Strickler of Clarion was awarded the honor of being the county champion in handicraft work and Miss Germain Yell of Boyne Falls tbe championship of clothing club work. Congratulations and lets keep up the good work.

FOUR MILES OF NEW SUBMARINE CABLE

Mackinac Island to Be Coonected With St. Igoace

Sixty-four and a half tons of especially made submarine cable will be laid during the coming week, connecting St. Ignace with Mackinac Island, almost four miles away, so members of the 100 famllies residing on the island the year round and tens of thousands of tourists who visit that historic spot each season might have vocal communication with the outside world when and as they want it.

This cable will replace that laid In 1899, which was badly damaged by the dragging anchor of a lake freighter which was forced to anchor during a severe storm. The old cable was broken about 200 feet from the short of Mackinac Island and because of ice, storm and cold, it was impossible to make permanent repairs.

The placing of tbe new eable will be a spectacular piece of work and one of great importance to the people of the state as well as to tourists and travelers.

NEW YACHT NEARING COMPLETION

SYLVIA, NEW LOGAN THOMSON YACHT, LAUNCHED JUNE 12

Trial Trip Will Be Made Aroued June 25th—Expected io Charlevoix First of July

Logan Thomson's yacht, Sylvia, which is being built by the Defoe Boat & Motor Works, Bay City, Mich., was launched last Saturday, June 12th. Mr. Thomson, with a party of fifteen friends were present at the launching, amid elaborate ceremonies. The following article, taken from the Bay City paper, gives an account of the launching:

"Finer than any yacht that ever entered or left Bay City is the craft 'Sylvia' which is receiving finishing touches at the Defoe Boat & Motor Works, after a period of eonstruction here which extended over several months.

"The boat is being built for Logan Thomson, a prominent paper manufacturer of Hamilton, O., and will be ready for a trial trip in about three weeks.

"The owner of the craft together with a party of 15 friends were at the shipyard last Snturday and witnessed the launching of the boat, which has a length of 133 feet and measures 22 feet from beam to benm. The boat will be captained by Roy Ranger, who nlready has a portion of his crew here getting things ready for the initial voynge.

"Although the cost of the bont was withheld today, it was intimated that it will, when completed, be considered onc of the most modern of its kind plying the waters of the Great Lakes. The latest in power boat equipment is being installed, according to an official of the local shipyard, and will be lacking in no detail when the boat leaves here. This will likely be a few days following the trlal trip, it was said."

Work on the boat house which will house the new craft is going forward rapidly. Sheet piling has been put in and preliminary work on the structure is well advanced. Considerable dredging is yet to be completed. It is not expected that the boat house will be ready when the boat arrives here around tbe first of July, but it will be completed by fall.

LARGE CONTRACT TO LOCAL FIRM

COVERS CONSTRUCTION OF 11 MILES OF CONCRETE

Charlevoix Abstract & Eogioeeriog Co. Lowest of Twelve Bidders oo Muskegon County Job

It is with pleasure we announce that the largest single contract let for a concrete highway in the state was awarded last week to the Charlevoix Abstract & Engineering company of this city.

The contract awarded covers the construction of approximately eleven miles of 20-foot concrete highway in Muskegon county on the lake shore road between the city of Muskegon and White Lake and will be used as a scenic drive.

The Charlevoix Abstract & Engineering Co. was the lowest among twelve biddera, with a bid of $388,196.22, not including extras and necessary additional features not included in the contract. The Lyons Construetion company of Grand Rapids, which has been associated with the local company in other road building jobs for the past few years, will do the bridge work on the job. Bass river gravel, which has been used on other construction jobs by the Abstract & Engineering company, was specified in the bid. This gravel is dredged from the river bottom and transported to the scene of construction by boat. This feature probably gave the local company a considerable edge over their competitors, in view of the fact thut boat transportation ls mueh eheaper thnn rail.

Work will be started on tbe new highway at once, but it will not be completed until late next season. One may grasp the magnitude of the project when they learn that there is 200,000 yards of grading to be completed and the job will require upwards of 50,000 barrels of cement.

Road building operations of the company have assumed greater proportions during the past few years and they are now equipped to handle contracts of the largest size. Their fine piece of work on the concrete rond south of the city on M-11 has gained national praise, which speaks well for their ability as road builders. R. F. Slonn, Sr., is head of the company, with his son, Robert Jr., supervising construetion work.

LOCAL BOAT ENTERED IN REGATTA

BRADY'S "MISS CHARLEVOIX" SHIPPED TUESDAY

Is Entered in 725 Hydroplaoe Class and Webb Trophy Free-for-all Event

Charlevoix will be represented at the national regatta of the Missiasippi Valley Power Boat Association at Louisville, Kentucky, on July 3rd, 4th and 5th by "Miss Charlevoix," owned and entered by M. Roy Brady.

She will appear in the 725 hydroplane class and in the free-for-all event for tbe great Webb trophy championship eup. "Miss Charlevoix" is a splendidly finished, showy boat, and has made some startling speed in preliminary triala. On Memorial Day she logged a measured mile in 59 seconds flat, making her a dangerous entry in the mile-a-minute class in which she will contend.

"Miss Charlevoix's" entrance waa made possible through the co-operation of James J. Reis, north side resorter, who guaranteed the payment of freight charges on the boat one way, and Earl Young and the Association of Commerce the other half. In case the boat places in the money and wins enough to eover expenses, the owners will pay expenses themselves. Mr. and Mrs. Brady are appreciative of the help given them, hut are confident that, barring any misfortune, they will place in the money.

The boat was shipped to Louisville on a flatcar Tuesday. The owners expect to leave Charlevoix on the 29th and will be in Louisville when the craft is unloaded before the races. Trial runs will be made on July 3rd, at which time a speed of 50 milea per hour must be made over a mile course. All trial trips around the course are clocked hy judges and any records broken at this time are given world recognition by the association.

Each club of the Mississippi Valley Power Bont association is entitled to a bid for the annual national regatta. With the organization of the Charlevoix Boat Club, it is the desire of the members to land the regata here at some future date, and they will apply for membership in the Mississippi Valley assoeiation with that purpose in view.

Mr. and Mrs. Brady have been leaders in promoting enthusiasm in motor boating here in Charlevoix and it is through their efforts that the Charlevoix Boat Club was organized. They have our best wishes for success at the races at Louisville.

The Brady Boat Company of this city announce that they have secured the agency in this territory for Chris-Craft motor boats, built by the Chris Smith & Sons Boat Co., of Algonac, Michigan.

Their first sale was made to John Webb, son of George Webb, president of the Belvedere Club, whose new craft, the Jessie W., is powered with a 100 h. p. Kermath motor and is capable of making 35 miles per hour. Other Chris-Craft speed boats owned by Charlevoix summer resorters are the Miss Tennessee, owned by Geo. Schaub, Jr., and the Holly-Hoo, owned by G. E. Hollingsworth.

An exclusive Chris-Craft race is in prospect for the summer between the three boats, which are of the same design and power. The race should prove interesting.

The Chris-Craft boats are very popular among motor boat entbusiasts and an effort will be made by the Brady Boat Co. to place more of them in Charlevoix waters.

CHICAGO GOLF COURSE OPENS

MANY NEW IMPROVEMENTS SINCE LAST SEASON

New Belvedere Course Will Be Ready for Play by First Week in August

The Chicago Golf Club of Charlevoix officially opened for the 1926 season on Monday morning of this week with a few changes in the office force and many important changes and improvements on the course.

Wm. Watson, who has acted in the capacity of professional for a number of yenrs, will be here again this year. Cleveland Roe is caddy master again this season, and his brother, George Roe, will patrol the course. Russell F. Blakeslee is bookkeeper with Miss Lila Heise as assistant. Billy Supernaw is the new nssistant caddy master.

Among the many improvements started last fall and completed during this spring are new, modern trappings throughout the entire course. The location of the tee on hole number 3 has been changed, as has the lay and length, the hole now being 186 yards, running east and west. Number four now runs through a patch of woods which was cleared for that purpose. Number 4 is now number five and former number 5 has been eliminated and converged into number 6 adding over a hundred yards to the length of that hole.

A modern sprinkling system eovering greens, fairways and tees has been installed. A motor driven pump with a capacity of 40,000 gallons daily will pump water to the tanks on the grounds. New, bright-colored flags with numbers in large black letters, take the place of the ones formerly used.

The course is in wonderful condition this season, numerous spring rains putting the fairway, greens and tees in first class shape.

Work on the new eighteen hole course of the Belvedere Golf Club is going forward rapidly. It is expected to have the first nine holes ready for play by the first of August. Numerous spring rains have hampered the work to some extent, but, at the same time, have helped wonderfully with the growth of new seedings. Golf enthusiasts are looking forward with much anticipation to the opening of the new golf course.

HAS RECORD OF 20 YEARS

LEE R. SMITH LEAVES SUNDAY FOR CLEARWATER

Accepts Positioo as Superiotendent of Mails in Soutbero City—Ao Efficieot Employe

After over twenty years' continual aervice in the employ of the U. S. postal service in the local postoffice, Lee R. Smith has surrendered to the lure of the south, and will leave on Sunday of this week for Clearwater, Florida, where he has accepted the position as superintendent of mails, an entirely new department to be instituted in that city on July first, when Clearwater becomes a postoffico listed as first class.

Mr. Smith first entered the employ of Uncle Sam in this line of work in 1906 as substitute carrier on rural route No. 2. Later, when ill health caused his father, Lou E. Smith, regular carrier on Route 2, to resign, ho took over the route. In 1911 he was advanced to the position as clerk in tho local post office, which position he held until in 1916, when as a reward for faithful and efficient service, he was advanced to the position as assistant postmaster.

For the past ten years he has handled this difficult work in a most satisfactory manner, and has become known and recognized as one of the most competent men in the service in Michigan.

Some three weeks ago, (and for that matter he has had the move in mind for some time) he made application for his transfer to the Clearwater postoffice. Due to the fact that the Clearwater postoffice was chsnged from second class to first elass, and additional, experienced men were needed, his request was granted.

Patrons of the Charlevoix postoffice will greatly regret his departure, for during his long period of service he has become intimately known to not only our permanent residents, but to thousands of summer visitors. However, we congratulnte him on his advancement, and our best wishes will follow him to his new home.

Mr. Smith expects to leave on Sunday of this week. Having to assume his duties at Clearwater on July first, he has decided to leave his family in Charlevoix until, September, when they will join him.

The departure of Mr. Smith from the local postoffice hns necessitated several chnnges. Orson Everts, for the past 12 years carrier on route No. 4, has been ndvanced to the position as nssistant postmaster. Harlan McGhan, substitute carrier, will temporarily take over route four. V. Y. Tuttle has been added to the force of city carriers.

The new men will soon become accustomed to their changed position, and patrons of the Charlevoix postoffice will receive the same efficient service as in the past.

COMMITTEE APPRECIATE RESPONSE

Merchaots Liberal With 4th of July Donations

Charlevoix's 4th of July committee, composed of S. O. Sorenson, S. M. Rose and William Wallace, are feeling very grateful toward Charlevoix merchants for their liberal response during the recent drive for funds to carry out the prospective Fourth of July program and celebration.

Practically the entire quota of expense has been pledged, and over 60 per eent of it paid in advance. According to the committee, tbe Fourth will be celebrated in a very fitting manner, with plenty of free amusements, lots of music, an excellent display of fireworks, and accompanying stunts that amuse the visitors.

One feature of the celebration will be an industrial parade, scheduled to take place in the early forenoon, In which a large number of our merchants will take part. The committee asks that all who intend to take part in this part of the program, to notify them, so that none will be overlooked in the final arrangements.

Charlevoix will without doubt entertain one of the biggest crowds in history on this national holiday.

Such Flavor

as this comes only in real Quaker Oats

THE price you pay for substitutes is the same as for the genuine Quaker Oats. The difference is in the flavor. And flavor, above all things, is important in oats.

That rich and toasty Quaker flavor is the result of some 50 years' milling experience. Once you taste it, you are spoiled for ordinary oats.

That is why millions demand the Quaker brand—why you should accept no other.

Qualser milling, too, retains much of the "bulk" of oats. And that makes laxatives less often needed. Protein, carbohydrates, and vitamines and "bulk" are thus combined to make Quaker Oats an excellently "balanced" food.

Get Quaker Oats today. Grocers have two kinds: Quick Quaker, which cooks in 3 to 5 minutes, and Quaker Oats.

NOT AT ALL NECESSARY

There is no necessity for having a great deal of lawlessness nbout. We do not have to put up with it, if we do not wish to.

Down in Iowa the people used to be bothered with bank robbers. Finally the citizens took a hand to help out the police. The bankers put in their institutions a couple thousand revolvers, 1,200 rifles, 240 riot guns and plenty of ammuaition.

In four years the number of bank robberies dropped from 56 to 6, the loss in robberies fell from $250,000 to $2,500 and 80 OUT of 89 BANDITS EITHER WENT TO JAIL OR WERE KILLED.

We do not aeed to keep even the bootleggers around if we do not wish to.

The men who are putting tarvia on M-11 are near Atwood from the south. They are boarding at the new hotel called the Haan Inn.

The missionary lady mentioned in last week's Courier gave a very interesting talk last Friday evening on how they do things in China.

Charley Zimmerman and Lewis Baar and two of their chums, all from Ft. Wayne, Ind., are spending their third summer's outing camping near Harwood lake. They made the trip up by auto in 13 hours.

In one day last week Klooster & Co. took in 45 eight and ten-gallon cream cans. We have not the number taken in at Burns & Veenstra's store. At any rate, show us a town of this size that does more business. Cash, too.

Never dispute with a lady about the rig she wears on her head, no matter how ridiculous it may appear, for in the majority of cases it will suit her if it is anywhere from the size of a commoa saucer to that of a cart wheel. If it is fashionable—that's the point, and argument is unnecessary.

A very interesting meeting was held at the M. E. church on Monday evening, it being the third quarterly meeting of the Ellsworth circuit. Dr. Randall, district superintendent, presided, and the subject, "Sin and Its Effects," was discussed. The circuit is in fine financial condition, being nearly paid up to date.

The Young People of Barnard will give a pageant, "The Laughing Cure," Friday, July 2ad, at 7:30 o'clock, at the M. E. church.—Adv. 25t1

And as Murray continued to advance, he struck out with his crutch.

"Keep off," he shrieked. "Keep off!" And then: "I can't reach him, Ezra. Let him have it!"

Pew crouched with his knife-hand drawn back.

"Aye, it takes blind Pew to let him have it," he croaked in his hateful voice.

His hand jerked forward. There was a flash in the moonlight, and my great-uncle staggered, the flung knife buried to the hilt in his side.

"I am stabbed," he gasped.

Silver brandished his crutch over his head.

"Pew's stabbed Murray!" he shouted. "Come on, Walruses! Lay off, ye James lads—we'll not harm ya, mates. Treasure for all, and no more tyranny!"

Peter and I caught my great-uncle as he fell. Coupeau jumped at the blind man with a bellow of rage, cutlass raised to strike; but as he came within reach Silver poised his crutch like a spear, leaned over and drove the sharp spike of the ferrule through the gunner's eye into the brain. Coupeau dropped in his tracks.

"I ha' done for Coupeau," Silver shouted again. "Don't make Long John do it all, lads!"

There was such a rush of enemies, such a howl of exultation, as took my breath away.

"Do you hold Murray, Peter," I said. "I'll finish that precious pair."

And I ran in at Pew, albeit more warily than Coupeau; but the blind man—and certes, if he was blind his hearing was so marvelous as to make up for it—retained a clubbed pistol, which was a serviceable weapon at close quarters, and Silver covered him overhead with that deadly crutch. I shouted to the after-guard to shoot them, but our people had not reloaded their pieces, and many were already engaged with the party we had just driven out, who swarmed in again through the same gap. Those of the James' men who were nearest were palpably lukewarm, and Silver, atop of the stockade, perceiving his advantage, thrust his crutch at me and continued trumpeting his rallying cries.

"Murray's a goner, mates! Coupeau's shark-bait! There's only the two Buckskins left. Go easy wi' they Jameses. Naught for ye to fight about, James lads! We'll divide square with ye."

Men swirled toward us from all sides of the stockade, the James' crew mingled with the Walrus', and where our people fought at all 'twas faintheartedly and to no purpose. We were pressed back, and presently were put to it to avoid being surrounded.

"We go to der house, Bob," squeaked Peter. "Der James men don't fight for us no more."

He had Murray's limp body slung over one shoulder and still retained the iron barrel of his musket—the stock had been demolished; but he ran easily beside me through the sand.

We reached the blockhouse alone on the side opposite the door, and circled it cautiously, no little concerned for Moira's safety, for pistols were popping and cutlasses clashing in several directions close at hand. With the moon obscured we could not see a musket's length ahead, and as I turned in toward the black oblong of the doorway I tripped over a corpse.

"'Tis on your own head your death will be, my man," said a cool voice. "I can hear you fine, and if you're not after—"

"Moira!" I exclaimed.

"And is it you, Bob? Oh, blessed saints, but I'm that glad. I thought you were— Is that Peter?"

"Ja," said Peter.

shoulder? A dead man? Is it him I shot a few minutes back?"

"'Tis Captain Murray," I answered, making way for Pater.

"Oh, Queen of Heaven! Sure, we're in bad case."

"We are," I assented grimly as I followed Peter inside. "Have you a light?"

She took a lanthorn from under a cloth, and its scanty rays played hide-and-seek with the shadows over the rude log walls and the piles of rum barrels and kegs of hard-tack and the chimsy stuck of treasure.

Peter laid my great-uncle gently upon the earthen floor—there was no softer bed—and began cutting away the garments from around the hilt of the knife, which was still fixed in his right side.

"And why didn't you go with them?" I asked. She gave me an indignant look.

"And be leaving the two of ye! I am not that kind of friend, Bob."

Peter looked up from his task.

"You got to watch dot door, Bob. Andt, Moira, you bring me some rum. Maybe Murray gets back his sense before—"

I suddenly found myself unwilling to believe it could be so.

"He can't Peter!"

"Ja," replied the Dutchman patiently. "Pretty soon he goes. He bleeds inside."

I stumbled to the doorway with my head in a whirl. Murray dying? 'Twas incredible! That tremendous personality, so masterful, so aloof, dominating all with whom he came in contact, saltily compounded of wickedness, greatness, wisdom and naïve vanity! And explain it how you will, I suddenly discovered an admiration for him which had been growing for months beneath my surface resentment. Up to this moment I had detested him. But I choked now at the thought of his death. Whatever he was, he was no coward. And there was about his end in this sordid, haphazard fashion, stabbed by a blind man in the dark, a redeeming touch of high tragedy. He, whose ambitions had vaulted the stars, to perish by the hand of Pew! And in a moment when apparently he had snatched victory from defeat!

Mechanically I carried chests of gold and silver ingots from the heap of treasure and built a barricade across the doorway. But nothing came. Feet shush-shushed in the sand all around the blockhouse; voices called, questioned and argued; an occasional shot was fired—no more. Flint's triumph had been too amazingly complete for him to grasp, and evidently there were dissensions in the pirates' ranks as to what the next step should be.

The hour-glass we had fetched from the Royal James stood by the door, and I remember that I turned it twice before Peter tapped my shoulder.

"He wants you," he said.

Murray lay with his head in Moira's lap. On his face was stamped a waxy pallor. His nostrils were sunken and pinched in. A crimson froth showed at the corner of his mouth. But his tawny eyes blazed with the unconquerable fire of his spirit. As I stooped over him a mocking gleam radiated from their black depths, and his lips moved in almost voiceless speech.

"Sorry, eh?" I nodded, and the mockery became more pronounced.

"Would have—won you—hoy—in—time." Moira wiped the dreadful bubbles from his lips.

"You—won't—carry—out—plot?" he asked.

"You Have Heard My Terms," I Said.

"'Twonld be dishonest to promisa," I answered. "And I douht if we are like to live much longer than you." The fingers of one hand fluttered strangely.

"Tut, boy—never—lose hope. Win—yet—myself."

His colorless lips parted in a ghastly smile at the shocked disbelief in my face.

"This—will be—end—of Flint. Kill me—kill himself." His fingers fluttered again, and Moira whispered—

"'Twill be his snuffbox he's after wanting, Bob."

And as I fumbled for it in the wreck of his coat she added—

"But 'twill be his death does he use it the once."

I hesitated, but the look in his eyes implored me to give it to him.

"Good lad!"

And his fingers closed lovingly on the jewled trinket, picking at the lid he was wont to click open and shut in moments of perplexity. The tawny eyes flirted toward Moira.

"Take care—maid—good blood—in—her. Family, Robert—breeding—landmarks in— mad world."

"I'll do what I can," I promised, seeing he expected an answer.

"Might do—worse—or more," he replied with the shadow of a smile. "Pew's knife—kept you—being—duke—Moira—"

A pause whilst Moira wiped his mouth.

"A mad world," he repeated. "What will—Prince Charles—say?"

His eyes clouded, and he murmured a snatch of song, one of those ranting Jacobite ballads that spread like wildfire after the '45—

"Cope sent a challenge frae Dunbar,
'Charlie, meet me an ye daur'—"

A coughing fit interrupted him, weakened him so I thought he was sped; but the ghostly voice went on with a hint of the gay, reckless tune:

"Hey, Johnnie Cope, are ye waukin' yet?
Or are your drums a-beatin' yet?
If ye waur waukin' I wad—"

His voice strengthened.

"Ah, your royal highness! Tha procession is ordered—the harolds—waiting—my lords—commons—"

He struggled so to rise that to save him I propped him against my shoulder.

"A glad day—this—and long coming. Do you use snuff—sir? 'Tis Rip-Rap—a sound brand."

He opened the box and raised a pinch to his nostrils.

"A glad day—sir—but a mad world." And so he died.

CHAPTER XVI

Prisoners

"Ahoy, the blockhouse!"

"Dot's Flint," whispered Peter. "You talk to him, Bob, ja."

"What is it?" I shouted back.

"Is Murray with ye?"

"He's dead," I answered after a moment of reflection.

"And that's — — lucky for him! Here's Tom Morphew ready to give him a taste of the cat."

A shrill howl echoed the words.

"Don't 'ee believe mun, Cap'n Flint! 'Tis all a lie! And 'ee promised I should ha' t' heatin' o' mun."

"'Tis true," I said wearily. "After sunrise you can send in a man to see for himself."

"Ah!" jeered Flint. "But ye see I'm not waiting for sunup or moonset or aught else, my Buckskin. We know how many o' ye there are; and if ye don't surrender, why, we'll put a torch to the blockhouse and roast ye out. Fire won't hurt gold and silver, but 'tain't friendly to live meat."

"'Twill cost you something first," I retorted.

"Not so much as ye might think."

"Dot's right," squeaked Peter beside me. "Ja, you better make a bargain wit' him, Bob."

"A bargain," I repeated. "What on earth can we bargain with?"

"Der treasure on der Dead Man's Chest."

"But that is—"

I turned to Moira.

"In a manner of speaking, that treasure is yours. 'Twas in your father's name, to be held in trust for others. Are you willing—"

"My faith, any cause will be the better without it," she interrupted. "What has it done but bring bloodshed and suffering upon all who trafficked in it? If it will just win us our lives, Bob, 'twill be the one good deed to its credit."

"Time's runnin' short," shouted Flint. "If ye won't surrender we'll start the fagots."

"Suit yourself," I replied with as much confidence as I could muster. "There are three of us here, and 'tis we know where the treasure lies on the Dead Man's Chest. If you won't even promise our lives we'll make the bitterest fight we can and carry the secret with us."

There was a babble of protest at this, several others joining their voices to Flint's, among them Silver.

"Naught's been said o' slayin' ye," declared Flint. "Give up the treasure, and we'll part friends."

"Aye, aye, Master Ormerod," called Silver. "Cap'n Flint puts it straight. There ain't a man of us would wish to be your enemy."

I looked hopelessly at Peter.

"What more can we win?" I asked. "'Tis a mockery to place credence in their promises."

"Ja," nodded Peter. "We don't trust 'em. But we know dot, Bob. We don't be fooled. Andt now anyway we get off alive. Afterward—"

He shrugged his mountainous shoulders.

I called to Flint:

"Mistress O'Donnell must have every consideration she is accustomed to, with decent lodging in the cabin and we two to attend her."

"Gut me!" roared Flint. "D'ye think we conduct a nunnery aboard the Walrus?"

"I am thinking she is a young maid by her lone, which is hard enough, let be she must dwell with pirates," I answered.

"There's Rule Four of our Articles," he sneered. "Ye will ha' heard it before. It should be assurance for any maid."

"You have heard my terms," I said. "Take them or leave them. There's eight hundred thousand pounds to be gained from treating us kindly. If you do not so, as sure as I am here we will die, the three of us, before we yield you the secret—and you should know the years 'twill require to dig over the Dead Man's Chest."

"We'll take you," he replied illnaturedly. "And such a argufying swab I never listened to or will again, — my eyes. Are ye fixed in your mind, Buckskin?"

A Good Name

. . priceless ~ and therefore jealously upheld

It is well known that the name DODGE BROTHERS is even more valuable than the vast works in which their product is built.

DODGE BROTHERS have kept the faith, and implicit public confidence has been their reward.

Year after year the car has continued to mature into a better and better product.

Beauty has been added to dependability, comfort and silence to beauty. Endless refinements have been made, and the quality of every detail either maintained or improved.

The result is a name that is altogether worthy of the remarkable public trust it inspires, and too priceless ever to jeopardize.

And, as a plus value, all Northern Hemlock studding, rafters and joists, grade-marked with the licensed brand shown above, are cut oversize—8% to 16⅔% thicker than load-bearing dimension stock of other structural woods—assuring greater strength to your building.

SAVING SECONDS

Expert railroad men tell us that it takes a fast railroad train an average of seven seconds to pass a crossing. Yet, according to reliable statistics, more than 7,000 automobilists were killed at grade crossings last year. They could not wait seven seconds.

They will wait where they are till Gabriel blows his trumpet, for there is no way of beating that.

It is difficult for the driver of a fast-moving automobile to gauge the relative speeds of his car and a swift train converging on the same point from different directions. Therefore there is only one safe rule to follow: Let the train go by.

What are seven seconds in the life of a motorist?

To lose them may be to save 50 years!

LET US CELEBRATE

Fourth of July this year will mark the 150th birthday of the Declaration of American Independence, and the centennial of the death of its author, Thomas Jefferson. For that reason there will be added significance to the occasion that should not be overlooked by patriotic communities who wish to fittingly commemorate those stirring scenes of Colonial history, and renew again our pledge to American ideals and traditions.

A splendid suggestion has been made, that instead of a single day we make it a "Fourth of July Week"; that instead of a single day of celebrating, given over to noise making and the usual holiday activities, which are usually meaningless, we devote the whole week in recalling the stirring scenes that led up to the establishment of this free nation among the governments of the world.

Beginning Monday, June 28, Patriot's Pledge of Faith Day will be celebrated in honor of the 150th anniversary of the day of the Declaration, drafted by and in the handwriting of Thomas Jefferson, was first presented to the Continental Congress. While the mayor of Philadelphia is ringing the Liberty Bell at 11 a. m., it is suggested that governors and mayors throughout the land ring bells as the "Echo of the Liberty Bell."

Tuesday will be Universal Education Day in honor of the great American system of free education which Jefferson aided in establishing, and Wednesday is Founders' Day, in recognition of the noble efforts of those who built upon a solid foundation the beginnings of a government destined to lead the world.

Thursday will be Greater America Day to celebrate the Louisiana Purchase by Jefferson, and Friday will be Signers' Day, in honor of the memory of the brave signers who proclaimed to the world a new doctrine of government—the immortal Declaration of Independence.

Saturday is to be Monticella Day, to commemorate the establishment of the home of Jefferson as a national memorial to the author of the Declaration of Independence. Sunday has been designated as Jefferson Centennial Day, as this is the hundredth anniversary of his death, and Monday, July 5, is to be known as Sesqui-Centennial Independence Day in honor of the 150th birthday of the nation.

This is a program that is deserving of the best efforts of every community as it gives an opportunity to impress upon the young generation our obligation to those who built so wisely that we might enjoy liberty and happiness to the extent never before known in the history of the human race.

A RANK INJUSTICE

We confess that we have done it. When traveling about the country we have met cars driven by fair ladies. Sometimes the driving of the approaching car has not appealed to us as altogether desirable. We again confess that in some instances we have believed that women should not drive cars and in a spirit of humiliation we again say that we have under-estimated the essential qualities of the women.

Women are not the best automobile drivers because they are too brave. That has been given a definite test in the airplane service where it was developed that women did not make good pilots because they lacked the quality of fear—they did not sense danger as quickly as men.

For a long time we have done the grave feminine race an injustice.

MICHIGAN IN SUMMER

Recently a large number of Michigan publishers had an opportunity to visit the northern part of the Lower Peninsula, many of them for the first time, and view at first hand the wonderful things nature has done to make this state the summer playground of the nation. The pencil pushers were in the north country for three days as guests of the Harbor Springs Chamber of Commerce, and not only did they come in contact with the beautiful region surrounding that community, but in going and coming and in side trips during their stay they saw unfolded glories of scenic nature for a hundred miles of which they had never dreamed.

Which reminds us that we seem to be just awakening to the unlimited possibilities of this state as an ideal place in which to spend the heated portion of the year. There is no particular part of the state which can be pointed out as exceeding to a large degree all rest of Michigan. From north to south, from east to west, thousands of inland lakes and streams vie with the coast lines of the Great Lakes region in an inviting appeal to those who would tarry for a while in search of soothing rest and comfort. Michigan invites the entire world to come here and share with us this paradise of summer loveliness.

HELP TO SAVE LIVES

One of the unexplained mysteries of automobile accidents at railroad crossings is, that so many of them happen out in the open country where an approaching train may be seen in most instances from a quarter to a mile away. There is not an excuse in the world for such accidents, which can only be laid at the door of careless drivers who rush past danger signals with neither a look to the right or left, endangering not only their own lives but the lives of those who happen to be unfortunate enough to be riding with them.

At least ninety-five per cent of the railroad crossing accidents, which cost the lives of 2,206 people in 1925 and injured 6,555 more, could have been avoided by careful driving at grade crossings. The railroads of the country are conducting a careful crossing campaign in an effort to cut down this appalling loss of human life. The campaign should have the fullest measure of public support. Every civic organization should help to stir up public opinion by setting an example of carefulness and by teaching habits of safety to others, for strange to say, some folks have to be taught how not to commit suicide on the highways.

DON'T BE A VANDAL

The grass plot may be ever so little but the owner keeps a watchful eye on it, and it gets up his ire if a careless foot tramples the tiniest blade. The same man, however, will take his car on a Sunday or a holiday and motor away from the noise of the city and back to nature on the country highways.

He stops his car and with wanton recklessness strips the highways of the beauty that nature provided, God's gift to all mankind.

Mr. Motorist, stop if you will and enjoy the flowers that greet you but leave them, please, that others may enjoy them also.—From Colliers.

LEGION DANCE IS SLATED FOR THIRD

Will Mark Formal Opening of Belvedere Casino

Leslie Shapton Post of the American Legion will hold their annual dance at the Belvedere Casino on Saturday evening, July 3rd, at 8:30 p. m.

The affair will mark the formal opening of the Belvedere Casino for the summer season of 1926, as the Belvedere orchestra, composed of men from the University of Chicago, will furnish the music.

The Legion dance, which is a regular annual affair, always draws a large and enthusiastic crowd. The Belvedere Casino, the use of which is kindly donated by the Belvedere Club, has one of the finest dance floors in the city and the music furnished is always the best.

Tickets are now on sale at Fessenden's drug store, Central drug store and George Giados', and also by Legion members.

BAPTIST CHURCH

A cordial invitation is extended to all who are not otherwhere engaged to worship with us. All the services will be held as usual except the "mid-week" which is changed from Thursday evening to Wednesday on account of the Band Concerts. Dr. Burns will speak morning and evening Sunday.

We learn that Dr. John Wellington Hong, pastor of the Woodward avenue church of Detroit, has rented and will occupy a cottage in Belvedere during the summer. We also understand that Dr. R. W. Hobbs, of Lansing, will spend part of the summer at Eveline Orchards. Other prominent Baptist pastors are headed this way and thus showing good judgment we think.

COMMUNICATIONS

Editor Courier, Dear Sir: I have rend with interest your article in the June 9th Courier in regard to the Ironton ferry, and also the one given by neighbor Coblentz. I thought when I first read the nrticle in the June 9th issue that I would give you my opinion in the matter, but we nll hesitate to express our opinion publicly. I wish to congratulate Bro. Coblentz on his courage nnd with this letter wish to take my stand beside him.

I take it that your article in the June 9th issue is all intended to be a news item except the last paragraph. This seems to be a combination of the editor's opinion. But I think, Mr. Editor, you should be a little more generous and cut down on the 15 trips some, for this would be exceptional and yet there is occasion for some to make several trips daily, and justly so, just the same as those living on the north side of Pine river cross and recross Pine River bridge. The Charlevoix County Nurseries employ several men who mostly live ncross the ferry. Breezy Point Farms employ several men also. They also get their mail at the Ironton post office. Their children attend the Ironton school. And what is greater still, all of these industries do their trading at Charlevoix. Are not these good reasons for using the ferry?

Eveline township is divided by this ferry, one-half of the township must cross the ferry to vote. I suppose we can stay at home if we are short the toll?

I do not believe that Charlevoix-the-Beautiful or nnyone that has our beautiful Charlevoix and Northern Michigan's best interest at heart wishes for a toll ferry. So many travelers used to stop at my place and inquire of the roads, that last summer I pnt up a sign which read, "Road Information." This sign stopped hundreds who would inquire: "Is this the road that we see advertised around Pine Lake?" "Is there only one way that we can go?" "Which is the nicest route?" "Which is the shortest?" and all such questions. I want to say right here frankly and honestly, that it was one of my greatest pleasures to step up to n car nnd hand out one of Charlevoix-the-Beautiful folders and say, "One of the finest and most beautiful drives we have in this country is the one you are on. Go ahead one-half mile and then turn straight east to the ferry. Be sure and visit the Charlevoix County Nurseries. They are the first road to the left across the ferry and nre nlways open to visitors and will give you a welcome. You can drive straight through the nursery and bnck onto the gravel road again. Then you come to the golf links, and a beautiful drive through virgin timber to the beautiful Whiting Park. There you can spend the night and a few days if you wish. The road is good all the way and most of the time you are in plain sight of Pine Lake." Travelers always ask this one question. "You speak of a ferry. What is it? Do they take cars across? And how much is the toll?" I never thougbt so much about this toll business until I made the trip south. I never knew why so many people inquired about the toll until I had driven a car through states that are 50 years behind what Northern Michigan boasts of. But now I know and so does everyone that has seen these states. And so when this question was put I have felt proud to say (and I am sure that everyone that is called upon to answer it has n right to feel proud) "Northern Michigan has no toll roads, ferries, or bridges. We nsk you to come and see our beauties and do not charge you for them."

Come, my brothers, do you want to drop back 50 years and put up a toll gate to our disgrace? Do you want to build up a beautiful county park and charge to look at it? Do you want to write across the bottom of that sign you have out on M-11 which reads: "Tnke the drive around Pine Lake," pay your toll and help us support our ferry, we can't do it ourselves. And worst of all, must I say to those who ask me: "Yes, you will have to pay toll. If you use our ferry you will have to help pay for it. Of course, you can go around it, it is much further and you will miss whnt this county is paying $1,000 a year for you to see." To me this would be surely hnmiliating indeed.

Do not let anyone hide us under a cloak of charging toll. We do not want a toll ferry. I renlly don't think anyone does. I don't see how they can. It isn't toll we want, it's service. Give us a free ferry and one that can be depended upon to cross at all times.

How many in the east side of our county are interested in these questions do you think? None. How many in Charlevoix? Very few. Then I say some one is trying to hide service under n cloak of toll, and if we don't watch out they are going to make it work. Think it over. Let's have n free ferry all the time and be proud of it.

Very truly yours,
Wm. F. Johnson.

Those who were charmed by the romantic scenes between the Earl of Huntingdon and beautiful Maid Marian in "Robin Hood," and the lithe Princess and delightful Thief in "The Thief of Bagdad" will be thrilled again by the dash of the love-making in "Don Q, Son of Zorro."

Exteriors for "Just Suppose," the latest Richard Barthelmess picture made hy Inspiration for First Nation release, were taken at Southampton, L. I., under the direction of Kenneth Webb. Palace Theatre, June 28 and 29.

But it remained for D. W. ANTRIM COUNTY HOME BURNS TO GROUND

Fire Loss Is Estimated at About $30,000

The Antrim county home, loented about two miles south east of Bellaire, was burned to the ground last Wednesday, the fire being discovered about noon. When the fire was discovered, the roof was afire and the flames quickly spread to all parts of the structure.

The building was modernly equipped, and was a large two-story structure with full basement. The loss will be something like $25,000, with $8,000 insurance. Some of the furniture and equipment was taken out.

There were 15 inmates, five of them practically bed patients, and all were taken out and cared for without excitement or injury. The barns und other out-buildings were not endangered.

Immediate steps have been taken by county officials towards rebuilding the structure with brick instead of wood, to be ready for occupancy before winter sets in.

Proper Handling of Alfalfa to be Demonstrated

The first "hay day" to be given in Charlevoix county by experts from M. S. C. will take place on the farm of J. H. Noble, one mile south and west of Advance on East Jordan road on July 6th, at 1:00 p. m. slow time.

Hay days were just put on last year and interest was so great that 19 counties are planning similar occasions this year.

The value of alfalfa is becoming more and more evident to stockmen and the saving in food value by proper handling means more money.

Hay Crops Entitled to Better Handling

Michigan's 500,000 acres of alfalfa again present many problems of handling, for hay, such an important crop. The ever increasing acreage of alfalfa in this state finds many growers who have 25, 50 or 100 acres of this legume on their farms. To care for such a crop twice a year is a job which means considerable thought as to economical methods in curing that hay so that losses in its quality are kept as low as possible.

Feeding Value Influenced

Alfalfa is a member of the legume family, that comprises the great group of food bearing plants characterized by their high content of crude protein. This protein content varies with the time of cutting or maturity of the plant and its total content in any hay can be easily changed. The age of maturity of the plants at time of cutting has a direct bearing on the grade or quality of the hay. As plants approach maturity and the process of seed formation, an appreciable percentage of the starch, sugar and protein in the cap of the leaves and stems is carried gradually to the seed head and to the roots, where these nutrients are not available for feeding.

Time of Cutting

Alfalfa should be cut for hay when one-quarter to one-half in bloom. At this time, numerous shoots will be found starting at the crown of the plant. By harvesting the crop at this stage of maturity, a large yield of high quality hay is secured, which is leafy and palatable and with no undue amount of fiber. Cutting late reduces the next crop and results in hay of lower feeding quality, while cutting early may weaken the stand.

Get Hay Out of Swath Quickly

In order that the digestible nutrients in alfalfa may be retained in proper condition, and that the hay be palatable, it is important that the crop be dried quickly and uniformly. The moisture contained within the plant is normally lost by evaporation through the leaves. Exposing these delicate leaves to the direct rays of the sunlight, as is the case when lying in the swath left by the cutter bar, will dry these leaves and shut off the moisture passages through which the stem moisture should move. As a result, the leaves become brittle and shatter badly when handled.

It is important, therefore, to get the hay into a windrow within a short time after cutting, especially if it is real good hay weather. Any system which turns the leaves to the center of a rather loose windrow and leaves the majority of the stems to the outside will give most satisfactory results in hay curing.

All these factors are important ones in curing alfalfa so that one may have a high grade of hay. Hay making demonstrations take these phrases of curing step by step from cutting to drawing the cured hay to the barn. Anyone attending much "Hay Days" can see these various operations for himself and judge their relative value over systems in common useage.

Don't throw away your old tires—trade them for new ones. Benj. Brown will deal with you.—Adv. 23t3

U TURNS ON BRIDGE STREET ARE FORBIDDEN

Charlevoix has at last fell in line with other cities of its size in regards to automobile traffic. U turns on Bridge street, from Belvedere avenue to the swing bridge is forbidden and the streets have been marked plain enough for anyone to comprehend the order.

Auto traffic on this thoroughfare is becoming more congested every day. Ordinary traffic was bad enough, but when at least half of the turns made were by people joy riding, tin lizzies loaded with from six to eight jay-hawking up and down the street, the situation became so serious that it was decided to cut out the U turns entirely.

The Courier has studied this situation closely. We believe that all cars should be parked parallel with the street instead of diagonally. Also that the limit for Bridge street parking should be 45 minutes or even less. This, in our opinion, should be adopted at once and the ruling strictly enforced.

Some seem to think a stop sign is a joke—intended for others to observe. We recommend a trip to the justice court for those who carry this idea. Every traffic law should be enforced to the limit. It means the saving of lives or serious injury to someone. Spend a half hour watching a street interesection and note the indifferenee of some drivers.

Two arrests have been made for violating traffic regulations. George Louiselle for making a U turn and Paul Hall for speeding on Bridge street. They were given the option of paying a $10 fine, $5.00 costs, or ten days in jail. For the safety of all we hope every regulation will be strictly enforced.

BELVEDERE HOTEL OPEN FOR SEASON—HEAVY BOOKINGS

New Six-piece Orchestra a Feature—Many Improvements Will Make Hotal More Attractive

The Belvedere hotel opened for the 1926 resort season last Friday, June 25th, and according to the present outlook, will enjoy a very successful season.

The management has engaged a new six-piece orchestra whieh is composed of college men from the Drake and Iowa state universities, Iowa. Two members of the orchestra are soloists of exeeptional ability, playing the clarinet and saxophone and their offerings will add interest to the regular offerings of the band. The orchestra comes here from the DesMoines Grant Club, one of the best clubs in Iowa, in charge of Arthur D. Brown, violinist and teacher of music in Iowa State university. They will furnish music in the casino and in the dining room during luncheon and dinner hours, besides occasional concerts.

Members of last year's organization who will assist the management this season are Harry Wilkins of Boston, in charge of dining room department; Edgar Yates of Chicago, as chef in charge of an efficient crew of Chicago kitchen experts; and Miss Mary Julian, stewardess. A new member of the organization is Miss Iva L. Johns, who comes highly recommended from the Summit Golf and Country Club of Toronto, and will be bookkeeper and private secretary to the management. Front office service will be in charge of Mr. M. Diffenderfer of Detroit, as chief clerk. Mr. Diffenderfer has had many years experience in high class summer and winter resort hotels and will add greatly to the efficieney of the organization.

The hotel has made many fine improvements since the last senson. Hot and cold running water will be found in every room not connected with a bath, and several large additional suites of two rooms with bath between have been added. Many of the rooms have been redecorated and attractively furnished with curtains of various shades of sun-fast voile, providing rooms in orchid, rose, peach, apple green, yellow and blue color schemes, which will undoubtedly prove very pleasing to the guests.

Bookings for the season are unusually good and according to Mr. Miller, warden of the Belvedere Club, all cottnges on the club's grounds will be occupied before the season is closed.

On Monday, July 5th, a table dc hote luncheon will be served from 12:00 to 1:30 and a table de hote dinner from 6:00 to 7:30. The Charlevoix friends of the Belvedere as well as out-of-town visitors will be given a cordial welcome.

ALL READY FOR THE BIG FOURTH

NATIONAL HOLIDAY TO BE OBSERVED ON THE 5th

A Continuous Round of Interesting Events Should Make the Day Long Remembered

The program for Charlevoix's Fourth of July celebration, to take place on Monday, July 5th, is practically complete and, with possibly a few minor changes, will stand as now arranged.

The first of the day's features will take place at 10:00 a. m., when Charlevoix merchants and other business enterprises will stage an industrial parade. A majority of our business men will participate in this event.

Then comes the patriotic address in the city park by Rev. Cecil Pollock of the M. E. church. This will complete the activities of the forenoon, and after lunch the program as outlined below will be taken up.

Program of the Day

10:00 a. m. Grand Parade with special prizes.
11:00 a. m. Patriotic address in City Park.
12:00 noon. Luncheon.
1:00 p. m. Coast Guard drill at Station beach.
2:00 p. m. Street sports on Bridge street. See programs for prizes.
3:00 p. m. Open air act by the Crawfords.
3:30 p. m. Baseball at Northside park.
4:00 p. m. Band concerts on Bridge street.
6:30 p. m. Open air act by the Crawfords.
8:00 p. m. Masquerade dance on Bridge street ending with grand march and awarding of prizes.
9:30 p. m. Fire works on Round Lake.

One of the best features of the day, and the one that will probably cause the most merriment, will be the masquerade dance on Bridge street, starting at 8:00 p. m. and continuing until ten. Liberal prizes are offered for the best costumes in this event.

The open air free acts by the Crawfords is also an attraction that will be greatly enjoyed. Charlevoix extends the hand of welcome and will entertain all who celebrate with us.

IRONTON FERRY IS NOW IN OPERATION

Will Run on Short Schedule Until Completely Outfitted

The new Ironton ferry was put into operation last Wednesday, making trips from 6:00 a. m. until 8:00 p. m., fast time.

This schedule will probably be in effect for at least two weeks, or until the ferry is outfitted. At present there is no floor in the engine room which will have to be completed and lights must be added before operating at night. Another cable is yet to be added.

The ferry handles six cars in nice shape and is proving very satisfactory.

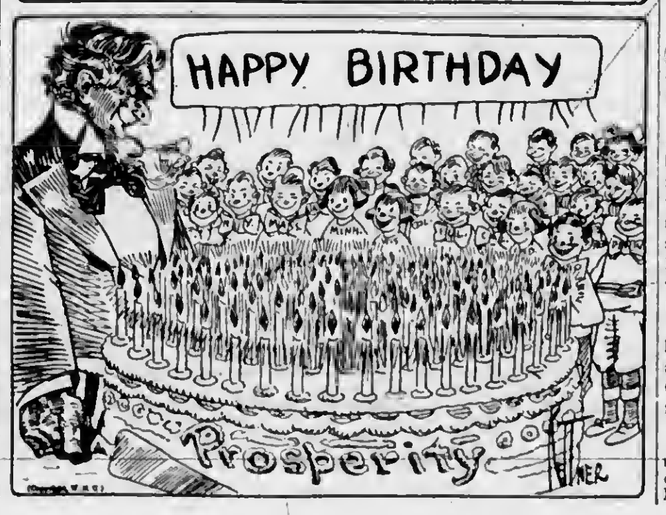
His Hundred and Fiftieth Birthday



SUNDAY SCHOOL RALLY WAS HELD LAST FRIDAY

Charlevoix Was Well Represented at Sessions in Boyne City

The Charlevoix churches were well represented at the Sunday school rally held last Friday at the Boyne City M. E. church.

Several helpful and inspiring talks were given during the two sessions. Dr. Mattson spoke on "Methods of Bible Study"; Mrs. W. H. Sloan on "Primary Work," Dr. Herman Burns on "Seeking the Individual"; Rev. Paul June on "Our Young People"; Mrs. Inez Martz on "Sunday School Evangelism"; and Rev. Cecil E. Pollock on "The Junior Church."

Owing to the weather conditions the picnic supper was eaten in the church basement instead of the city park as scheduled.

The principal business was the decision to remain in the state association and accept the state apportionment of $66.00 and pay it if possible, though no pledge will be signed.

BARBERRY INJURIOUS TO GRAIN

CHARLEVOIX COUNTY TO BE RID OF NUISANCE

Five Men Sent to Free Community of This Menace—Will Visit Every Farm

Five men, Harry S. Hunter, John H. Breyfogle, George S. McIntyre, Lloyd Kurtz and Roseoe G. Smith, have been detailed by Walter F. Reddy, state leader of the federal barberry eradieation forces, to make a search of Charlevoix County for common barberry bushes whieh spread the black stem rust to grain. These government agents started work June 26th.

While operating in the vicinity of Charlevoix they will make their headquarters at the residence of Wm. Heise, 813 State St., Charlevoix.

These barberry scouts will be required to visit every farm in the county, and also to check over every town property to see that the bushes previously found, or any missed bushes have been removed. Their instructions specifieally state that they are not to leave the county until they ean account for the destruction of every eommon barberry they can find.

The survey in Charlevoix county is a part of the eampaign now in progress in the thirteen north eentral states. The movement is sponsored by the national and state governments with many other interested agencies participating. In accordance with a plan worked out by the United States Department of Agriculture each of the thirteen is being covered county by county, the scouts visiting every farm and making a thorough inspection for the presence of eommon barberries.

Literature and information regarding the common barberry may be obtained by writing the Squad Leader, P. O. Box 113, Charlevoix, Michigan.

MANY ACCIDENTS OVER WEEK END

SIX SMASH-UPS ARE REPORTED SINCE LAST SATURDAY

Camping Party Turned Turtle on Norwood Road—Mrs. Hattie McNeil Run Down Sunday

The past week end witnessed an unusual number of automobile accidents, several of which resulted in painful injuries to occupants of the cars involved.

Last Saturday morning, while driving up the lane to the Loeb residence at the Loeb Farms, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Tucker were quite seriously injured when their Chevrolet sedan left the road in some manner and collided with a tree. Mr. Tucker, who was thrown into the windshield was severely cut about the face. Mrs. Tucker, who was driving the car, was thrown against the steering wheel and injured about the chest and face. Mr. Tucker is the Loeb family chauffeur in Chicago. The front end of the sedan was badly damaged.

Saturday afternoon Marvin Arkin and Bly Hulburt, who, with a party of two other boy friends, were on a camping trip through the northern part of the state, were brought to the Charlevoix hospital more or less bruised up as the result of their car turning turtle at the foot of Stafford hill north of Norwood. Traveling a strange road, the boys were unaware of and unable to negotiate the sharp curve. They left here Monday morning after receiving medical attention at the hospital.

Sunday morning at about 3:30 o'clock a Chevrolet coupe containing Leroy Allars, Emil Pischner, Mrs. Hunt and James Earl, owner of the car, turned over on the Petoskey road about a quarter of a mile south of Burgess resulting in the serious injury of Mrs. Hunt, who is now in the Petoskey hospital. The top of the car was completely demolished and the two left wheels smashed. The party were out for a ride after closing hours at Earl's restaurant.

Sunday afternoon at about 4:30, a Ford car driven by Robert Matchett and a Studebaker driven by Miss Helen Ward of East Jordan, collided at the corner of Bridge and Clinton streets. One wheel and the left rear fender on the Ford were smashed and Miss Ruth Matchett, an occupant of the Ford was injured about the legs.

Mrs. Hattie McNeil is confined to her bed at her home on Petoskey avenue, the result of injuries received Sunday afternoon st 4:30 o'clock when a car driven by M. P. Herron of Mullet Lake ran into her while she was crossing Petoskey avenue near the Forrest Wood home. The impact rendered her unconscious and she was earried to her home by the owner of the car, who also called the doctor. Her injuries were not serious.

Monday morning, while on his way to Charlevoix to attend the meeting of the board of supervisors, Frank Wangeman was injured about the legs when his Dodge sedan turned turtle at the foot of the hill coming from the East Jordan-Peninsular road onto the Ironton-Boyne City road. It seems that his brakes were not working properly and he was unable to turn the corner.

No apparent reason ean be given for this unusual number of auto accidents. A little less speed and more caution will probably remedy the situation.

The local Order of Moose have rented Lakeside Pavilion and will conduct a 10c dance celebration day, Monday, July 5.—Adv. 26t1

FIREWORKS LAW BEING VIOLATED IN CHARLEVOIX

People are complaining that the Fourth of July fireworks law is being violated in Charlevoix, not only on week days, but on Sunday, both by children and grownups.

Fireworks may be sold in Michigan this year from June 21 to July 5, but may not be exploded in public except on July 3, 4 and 5, by terms of a recently enacted state law.

The state law limits the size of fireworks which may be legally exploded and provides further that none shall be set off within one block of a hospital, asylum or infirmary.

Six Rules For Preventing Fire In The Forests

1. Matches—Be sure your match is out. Break it in two before you throw it away.

2. Tobacco—Be sure that pipe ashes and cigar or cigarette stubs are dead before throwing them away. Never throw them into brush, leaves, or needles.

3. Making Camp—Before building a fire scrape away all inflammable material from a spot 5 feet in diameter. Dig a hole in the center and in it build your camp fire. Keep your fire small. Never build it against trees or logs or near brush.

4. Breaking Camp—Never break camp until your fire is out—dead out.

5. Brush Burning.—Never burn slash or brush in windy weather or while there is the slightest danger that the fire will get away.

6. How to Put Out a Camp Fire—Stir the coals while soaking them with water. Turn small sticks and drench both sides. Wet the ground around the fire. If you can't get water stir in dirt and tread it down until packed tight over and around the fire. Be sure the last spark is dead.

Michigan is the nation's playground. Last year 2,500,000 vacationists enjoyed Michigan's natural beauty. And summer visitors spent $200,000,000 last year in Michigan.

"Yes."

"Drop your arms and hide where ye are, then. We're comin' in to look ye over."

Torches flickered around the circuit of the stockade, and as they drew nearer Peter and I tore down the barricade of treasure I had built across the doorway. Figures appeared in the wavy light, naked to the waist, scratched by the jungis growth; uncouth, grizzled faces lowered at us.

"Keep back," I warned them. "We'll let no man in until Captain Flint is here."

"Careful, ain't ye, Buckskin?" ha mocked me from behind a clump of pirates. "Make wuy, shipmates. Ya'll all ha' a chance to see the tressure, soon or lata, and we'll share in it equal and regular, accordin' to the Articles."

The group split to make way for bim, and he strode up to the door. Bones was with him, and Silver, and the man they called Black Dog, who carried a torch, as did Bones. And behind them all limped an awful creature, whose grimy face was a mask of pain, whose bare back and flanks were crisscrossed with festering welts. In one hand he held a cat-o'-nine-tails, the pendent rope lashes with their jagged knots stained a dark claret hue.

Bones flourished his torch as they entered the low door, and the light shone into every corner of the big hut.

"Is that Murray?"

He pointed to the body that lay beneath the hacked remnants of the plum satin coat which served as shroud.

"Yes," I said, and Moira shrank betwixt Peter and me as they crowded forward, staring open-mouthed at the cold clay that represented the man they had so feured and hated.

"Gut me," swore Flint. "I never thought to see Andrew Murray lyin' stark."

Silver's eyes glinted from bis slab of a face.

"He don't figure much now, do he, mates?" he said.

"Let's have a look at him," spoke up Bones abruptly. "Here, Black Dog, bring up your light, too."

The man with the sore back limped after them, drawing the tails of his cat through the fingers of one hand with a kind of lingering caress.

"Let me at mun," he muttered. "I'll flay mun, I will! I'll learn mun t' murder sailormen. Five o' us, nnd—"

Bones brushed off the plum satin coat with one toe, nnd Murray's gaunt white face smiled up at them, faintly satirical, the snuff-box still c in one hand.

"— me, 'tis so he looked ever!" gasped Flint.

"'Tuin't right nor natural," said Bones. "He looks like he knowed we was here—and couldn't harm him none."

"He'll look diff'rent when I lash mun," whined the man with the cat, pushing past Black Dog. "Wait till t' est slices into t' back o' mun, cap'n. I'll cut t' grin off'n t' devil's face o' mun."

Twaa Silver caught the poor fellow's arm as it was raised to strike.

"No, no, Tom!" he cried. "Murray's dead."

"Dead?" answered the man dazedly. "But 'ee promised I should ha' t' beatin' o' mun!"

"Why? He beat me till I was like t' die. He beat three o' my mates till they died, an Job Pytchens is a-dyin' out in the sand right now."

Nut Flint, himself snatched the cat from the man's grasp with unaffected horror.

"Ye can't beat a dead man, Tom," insisted the Walrus' captain. "'Tis bad luck. And look at the good luck we hu' had since we found Darby McGraw! I can tell ye, mates, I'm a-going to hang on to my luck."

Bones growled assent, and Silver added—

"Aye, aye, cap'n; nnd if ye'll be guided by me ye'll lose no time in puttin Murray underground."

They all exchanged superstitious glances, and Bones said hoarsely—

"He were close to bein' more'n human, weren't he?"

"They do say as how ye cnn chain down a ha'nt by drivin' a stake through the body," suggested Black Dog—and he shook so that his torch scattered sparks.

"It's bad luck to mutilate the dead," objected Flint. "No, no, we'll bury him quick and be done with it."

"Nut 'ee promised I was t' beat mun," sobbed Tom Morphew. "I, let 'ee in, Long John, and 'ee promised!"

"How was I to know he'd be dead?" returned Silver. "Don't ye take on so, Tom. We'll give ye a double handful o' onzas for what ye done, nnd when your back's well ye'll ha' a rare spree wi' the yellow boys, eh?"

Nut Morphew refused to be comforted. He limped from the hut, trailing his whip behind him.

"'Tisn't goold I want," he wept. "'Tis to lay my lash to t' back o' mun. Aye! Till be do he bloody raw, same as Job Pytchens and they other lads as is under sod. Oh, my pore back!"

There was an interval of silence after he was gone.

"It's bad luck to touch the dead," reaffirmed Flint. "No, no, the thing to do is to bury him quick. You take half a dozen men, Bill, and plant him anywhere—so's he's deep enough."

"And what about the treasure?" called one of the men by the door.

"Aye, aye," chimed in a second. "When do we shift it ahoard and divvy up?"

Flint stroked his chin, considering.

"Why, there's no hurry ubout the treasure, mates," he answered finally. "'Tis safe here. What we all need now is a dram o' rum and two watches below."

There was a general murmur of assent with this sentiment, and he crooked his finger at me.

"Come along, Buckskin. Wa'll put the three o' ye sboardship, out o' harm's way, seein' as ye're so precious o' your skins. Long John, I'll leave it to ye to guard the prisoners. Give the girl a stateroom for herself—less'n ye might wish to share it, Buckskin?" he added with a leer that fetched a ruddy tide to Moira's cheeks.

Silver motionsd us to precede him into the night, and as we passed out he gathered together a party of men who formed loosely around us.

"If so be as ye'll give me your word to come peaceable, Master Ormerod, I can make things easier for ye," he offered when we were clear of tha hut.

"What do you say, Peter?" I asked the Dutchman.

"Ja."

"That's enough for me," announced Silver cheerfully. "And very sensible of ye, too, gentlemen. Not quite so fast. I'm only a crippled sailorman, and I ha' labored hard this night. Aye, it were such a seesaw o' fortune as kep' my heart a-poppin' in my throat. I thought ye had me on the stockade; but there's none like Pew wi' the knife, and he can smell his man when he can't see him. Well, well, who'd ha 's'posed when we met in New York we'd come to aught like this, Master Ormerod?"

I lacked the heart to answer him, and we stumbled through the woods in silence to the shore of the Anchorage. Here one of the Walrus' boats was launched, and we were rowed out to where she lay, bar bnll squatting like a rock in the quiet water. Men hailed us from her deck, a whip was sent down for Silver's convenience, nnd the rest of us climbed the side ladder. Moira as agile as any after her months at sea.

"Here we are, safe and snug on the old Walrus," remarked Silver, still aggressively cheery; "and them as is here can call theirselves fortunate, 'cause there's a plenty as bu' kept Murray company. Aye, blast me for a swab, but it bu' been a bloody night. Get for'ard, mates."

This to the men who had come off with us.

"I'll see to the pris'ners. Now then, gentlemen—and mistress—you come along wi' me, and I'll make ye all as comf'table as if ye was in a Bristol packet."

He prodded a muscular forefinger into my chest.

"You mind that, Master Ormerod. You mind that Long John was your friend 'Cause why, says you? Here's the Walrus, and here's a treasure, and here's Flint, and here's nmyhi twelve-score lads as don't all think alike, and here's Bill Bones—and here's me. A goodish bit might happen, my master. And who's to say what will sturt it u-happenin'? Not me! Nor who might come out on top a'terwurd."

And with a parting wink he stumped aft, crooking his finger in sign that we should follow him across the untidy deck.

"Glory!" sniffed Moira, her nose in air. "This will be more the like of a stable than a ship."

She did not exaggerate. The Walrus was dirtier than she had been the night Peter and I were committed to her as hostage. Her decks were foul with grease and all manner of filth; her paint was crocked and peeling; a cloud of flies buzzed around a tub of fish-guts which nobody would take the trouble to cast overside; from an open hatch poured a sour, acrid stench. A strange contrast with the Royal James!

Inside the companionway under the poop we tripped over the usual litter of broken bottles, pistol-flints and odds and ends of cast-off clothing. Silver balanced himself on his crutch against the wall, struck flint and steel to a slow-match and ignited the wick of a whale-oil lanthorn which depended from a hook. Holding this above his head, he surveyed the double line of stateroom doors, very similar to the plan of the cabin quarters of the James.

"Room for all," he pronounced. "This here to larboard is Flint's, and Bones' berth's opposite. T'others are full o' junk, but ye can soon clear 'em out."

We did the best we could, which was very little, and then persuaded Moira to risk lying in the cleaner of the two rooms—we had chosen it for her because it had a bolt on the inside of the door and offered her a degree of privacy—while Peter and I berthed across the companionway, Peter on the floor by reason of his bulk, and I in the one cramped bunk. And I marvel to say that we went promptly asleep and did not waken until the noon sun was flooding through the grimy panes of the cabin windows.

CHAPTER XVII

Flint's Way

Bones swaggered into the cabin whilst we were at breakfast, and his leathery face crinkled in what he intended for an amorous grimace as his eyes fell upon Moira.

"This is what I calls proper homelike," he declared. "You come and sit on Billy's knee, my pretty, und cut up this here goat for me."

I started to rise, but Darby was ahead of me.

"Do ye so much as put a finger on her, and I'll send a bullet into the black heart o' ye," he challenged in his shrill boy's voice.

"Oh, ye will? Ye red-headed—"

"Me head's the ship's luck," boasted Darby. "The less ye say on that score, the betther for ye."

"We'll see to that!" snurled Bones. "You're the cabin boy, my lad, and no more; and I—"

He tugged at the emblass-hilt, and Darby, in no wise dauuted, hauled forth a pistol as long as his arm. But before one could assail the other Flint shoved in from the companionway and caught Bones by the shoulder.

FRESHENING BREEZES

The old-fashioned kid who turned a sickly green from smoking a few dried mullin leavea out back of the barn now has a son who proudly announces he'd walk a mile any time.

The most comforting thing that Florida has heard in a long while waa the announcement there was no land in the vicinity of the north pole.

There seems to have been no rumors of a strike in Pennsylvania during the recent senatorial primary.

Our idea of a well bred man is the fellow who can smile when some careless motorist dents the fenders on his parked car.

What has become of the old-fashioned kid who thought that fifty cents was a whole lot of money with which to celebrate the Fourth?

Keeping sand out of the sugar and applying it to business methods has saved many a grocer from failure.

We know a man who spent his week-ends with a Scotch friend and the system got rid of n thirty-pound surplus.

BRIEF SKETCH OF FRED W. GREEN

AS HE APPEARS TO THOSE WHO KNOW HIM

Versatile, Human, and Likeable, He Meet All Comers and Asks for More—A Real Friend

A brief sketch of the career and personality of Ionia's leading manufacturer and mayor who is being urged to oppose Groesbeck, by Lee J. Smits.

It requires no vnst amount of political acumen to predict that, within a few weeks, one of the two most conspicuous men in Michigan will be Fred W. Green, of Ionia. The other will be Alex J. Groesbeck, of Detroit and Lansing, and, to n considerable degree, the conspicuity of Governor Groesbeck will be the result of the persistent, public attention paid him by Mayor Green.

It is safe to say that in every one of Michigan's 84 counties are persons who know Fred Green "personally." That is to say, they call him Fred or General which is nlmost as familinr, since the title, earned as n member of governor's staff, has nlways heen amusing to Green, although he earned it by hard nnd disagreeable work for the state under Pingree, who appointed him inspector general to clean house after a scandal which made a national stir.

There is a belief, not so very sound, that the north woods are a testing ground for the qualities of heart and soul that mnke a mnn. A man actually may be very much worth-while in civilized society and at the same time be more or less of a liability in the wildnerness becnuse of broken nrches or a delicate digestion. At the same time, Fred Green, in the woods gives a well-rounded picture of Fred Green in industry, Fred Green in politics, Fred Green at home. Fred Green on the golf course or Fred Green at a baseball game.

Picture a man of no more thnn average height, broad of shoulder nnd thick of chest, carrying himself with military erectness, but beyond that with nothing at all military about him. Probably the most democratic man in Michigan. His is not the hand-shaking, cultivnted democracy of the politician, but the natural gift for meeting folks, liking them, remembering them and making them like him.

Most of us, in self-protection, would be compelled, renching Green's position in the world, to fend off the mass of humanity somewhat, but Green meets nll comers and asks for more. On his way up north he is received on familiar terms by conductors, brakemen, Pullman porters and dining car waiters, and at Seney, the late P. M. Stillman, train dispatcher, station agent, postmnster, supervisor, owner of the telephone company, etc., etc., etc., would welcome him as a brother, more sincerely than most brothers, as it is likely Greep was Stillmnn's best friend. It is likely that the men in Michigan, humble men nnd others not so humble, who would say, "Fred Green is my best friend," would mnke n list nstounding even to Green himself.

Brown, caretaker of Camp Kennedy, packs Fred Green and party 40 miles in to Nevin's Lake in a vnriety of vehicles. Camp Kennedy was nnmed for Rev. Fr. Kennedy of Ypsilanti, a life-long friend of Green's, who with his own hands did much of the work of erecting what the natives call the club-house. Green is not affiliated with the Romnn Catholic church, but, like the beloved priest during his life-time, makes no question of creed when it comes to friendship, or helpfulness.

Camp Kennedy is no joy-ride camp. The click of the poker chip is not heard there, and if you were a guest and made the mistake of sitting up late before the fire, you would regret it in the dark of the morning when Stanley plucked at your blanket and announced breakfast. A good breakfast, well served, and around the table, elbow to elbow, Chapman and MacBurney, Green's partners in the camp and in business enterprises; Mayor John Smith of Detroit; Ross Fowser of Manton, Mich., who trains bird dogs for Green; Stanley, the general utility man who does everything from driving cars to enforcing the rule that nll hunters must be on the Grand Marais-Seney road—snfely out of the brush, by 4 o'clock in the afternoon; Judge Ira W. Jayne, of Detroit, nnd perhnps one or two other guests.

Brenkfast is by artificial light, but there is no early morning dullness in that cnmp. Green hits the deck with n jig step, a snatch of song and much hearty laughter. At night it is just the same, although there are sometimes hunters who are not much in the mood for frolic. Deer hunting, according to the Green schedule, is hard work. Green himself is built physically, along Rooseveltian lines, and like Roosevelt, hunts with might and main. He invnriably hnngs up his buck, but that doesn't stop him. He will "play dog" for the others, plunging through swamp nnd thicket, and if there is nothing else to do, will fnre forth in a blizzard to prospect for the next season's trout fishing.

Sport is one of the things that snves Fred Green from being the ideal, lunch club type of business man. A pointer quartering grouse cover, n favorite fly rod and a fast stream, a game trotter thundering down the stretch, the swift going of a pair of well-matched boxers, the sweep of fairway and smack of club on ball—he will turn from these to the intricacies of new machines for weaving reed furniture or to untangle, as he so often does, the snarls in the lives of those who live in his town, work in his shops or who have other claim on him than that they need him. To all of these affairs he brings a zest, a delight in the game and a shrewd inside knowledge.

It would have been logical to have begun n story about Fred Green with that statement that he has been mayor of Ionia for 13 terms in succession, but to nnyone who knows him, that seems obvious. He couldn't very well get out of being mayor of his home town. To save themselves the trouble of re-electing him so often, the Ionin voters have altered the charter to make the mayor's term in office two years instead of one.

Green is about as thoroughly n Michigan product as could be imagined. He was born, 54 years ago when Pine was king, in Mnnistee, and spent his boyhood in Cadillac. After high school, he worked his way through the state normal nt Ypsilanti and was given n life certificate ns a teacher. His first business was in the insurance field. He paid $300 for that first opportunity, nnd borrowed the money without seeurity. He pnid his own way through the University of Michigan law depnrtment and finished just as the Spanish-Americnn war broke out. He commanded Co. G. 31st Michigan Volunteer Infantry, in Cuba and

By B. C. Mellencamp

Cure Alfalfa Properly—Save $5 to $10 Per Ton

Attend the "Big Hay Day" on July 6th at 1:00 p. m. slow time at the farm of J. H. Noble, one mile south and west of Advance and see for yourselves this "new" system of handling alfalfa hay, from cutting to the cured product and all the operations and make your own conclusions as to its merits.

L. D. Kurtz, alfalfa expert from M. S. C., will be on the grounds, as well as representatives from various implement companies to demonstrate the various makes of hay making machinery.

It is necessary to use a left hand side delivery rake in this new way, instead of the right hand and many wonder wherein lies the real advantage of these new left hand rakes. The only real way to determine for yourself is to actually see such implements in operation.

The new system will save from $5 to $10 per ton in selling value, cuts your labor charge, saves the quality of hay and increases the yield of succeeding crop as a result of the rapid handling and getting the hay off the ground and in the barn in a short time.

This is the last announcement, so make your plans now and be at J. H. Noble's, promptly at 1:00 p. m. slow time, July 6th, and judge for yourself.

The Young People of Barnard will give a pageant, "The Laughing Cure," Friday, July 2nd, at 7:30 o'clock at the M. E. church at Barnard. Ice cream, cake and coffee will be served after entertainment. —Adv. 26t1

AT THE MOVIES

Langdon in Love with a Billboard Girl in New Film

Harry Langdon falls in love with the face of a girl that adorns a billboard as a preliminary to his comical trials and tribulations in "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp," which comes next Monday and Tuesday to the Palace Theatre. This is Harry's first feature length comedy under the terms of his recent contract with First National.

Harry Edwards directed "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp." The supporting cast includes Joan Crawford, Edwards Davis, Alec Francis, Tom Murray and Brooks Benedict.

Beauty Vies with Humor and Thrills in "That's My Baby"

In "That's My Baby," Saturday and Sunday at Palace Theatre, Douglas MacLean proves that lavish settings and gorgeous backgrounds when combined with hilarious comedy and riotous thrills double the entertainment value of a picture.

Much of the important action in this new rollicking MacLean vehicle is played against the background of a huge charity Turkish bazaar. Color, gaiety, and dozens of lovely girls clad in alluring harem costumes make up a magnificent scene that adds a touch of extravagant beauty to the fast and furious fun.

From Hula Dancer to Choir Girl

Betty Compson, beautiful screen star, goes from the ridiculous to the sublime in "The Wise Guy," Frank Lloyd's new First National picture, in which she has one of the featured roles with James Kirkwood and Mary Astor. "The Wise Guy" is slated to be shown at the Palace Theatre here next Wednesday and Thursday.

In the first half of the picture Miss Compson is seen as a hula-hula dancer. She is associated with a medicine show and does a South Seas dance to draw the crowds.

Others in the cast in addition to Kirkwood, Miss Compson and Miss Astor are Mary Carr, George F. Marion and George Cooper.

Rugged Scenery High Light of Mix Films

The most rugged scenery in America is shown in "Tony Runs Wild," Fox Films latest thriller, starring Tom Mix and his famous horse, "Tony," which will be shown at the Majestic Theatre July 4 and 5.

The location of this picture is along the Apache trail, in the wild horse country, near the Pueblos of the ancient Cliff Dwellers, and the picturesque beauty of the setting rivals that of the Grand Canyon, according to Mix. It is near the great Roosevelt dam which supplies water to irrigate thousands of farms in Arizona.

Can You Wear Smart Clothes—Smartly?

Wearing smart clothes in a screen play cannot be classed as anything new or novel.

But wearing smart clothes smartly—that's quite another thing.

Fashion experts claim that the one screen star who wears smart clothes just a bit smarter than almost any other, is Bebe Daniels.

In "Miss Brewster's Millions," her current starring production for Paramount, a novel fashion show is introduced, which gives Miss Daniels the greatest opportunity she has yet had to firmly clinch the claim made for her.

"Miss Brewster's Millions," due at the Palace on July 2, is the first under her new contract. It was directed by Clarence Badger. In the supporting cast we find the names of Warner Baxter and Ford Sterling.

came back battalion adjutant. He was elected city attorney of Ypsilanti and then, in the practice of law, became concerned in the affairs of the Ypsilanti Reed Furniture Co. Associated with John W. Thwaites in that business, he carried on its development until the Green interests comprise the largest manufacturers of reed furniture in the world, with reed plantations in the Orient and agencies in every country.

The Ypsilanti Reed Furniture Co., through Green, first gave worth while employment to convicts in Michigan. The curse of prison idleness was lifted when Green, at the solicitations of the state administration, taught remunerative trades to thousands of prisoners and paid them at the rate of $1 a day, many times the pittance they had been able to earn in other prison industries. That was two decades ago, and the prison wage rate in Michigan has never been raised above the high level Green placed it on in the beginning. Men graduating from prison employment were given jobs in free shops and Green has turned hundreds of young men from costly nonproducers to self-respecting craftsmen—and he didn't abandon the undertaking when he gave up prison contracts in 1921, despite the insistence of the state administration that he should continue to employ convicts. How many men, after serving prison terms, have been helped along and kept straight, year after year, by Fred Green, nobody knows but Green himself, and he won't tell. There has never been any ballyhoo about it. There never will be.

Green is president, vice-president, director, secretary-treasurer, etc., etc., of a long list of corporations. Successful leaders of industry are not uncommon in this country. But it is to be doubted whether any other man who has organized and directed and presided as much as he has, ever has had more fun out of living, or has succeeded in giving more of himself in human relationships.

Of late years he has built a big house on a hill in Ionia, with great oaks surrounding it. High school youngsters hold parties there and there is no person in Ionia—or anywhere else—who knows Fred Green who has not ready access through the front door. Social boundary lines are absolutely meaningless to him. He had an out-of-town visitor of some importance one evening and the man arrived too late for dinner. Mrs. Green and Peggy had gone to Grand Rapids to a Shakespearean play with a group of Peggy's school friends. Fred Green cooked a venison supper—it was late in the fall—and entertained his guest at the kitchen table!

In the basement of the Green home is a great log cabin. Ross Fowser, Brownie of Nevin's Lake and Green himself cut the hemlocks in the upper peninsula. There are a fireplace, guns and trophies and the atmosphere of a hunting lodge. Is this spacious den sacred to the master of the house? It is not. School children invade it in swarms.

Fred Green spends considerable time by himself, but the things he has of comfort and luxury and beauty, he freely shares. When he is alone, it riding over a country road, or wading a forest stream or trailing a buck in November.

One of the most famous sporting men in America once made the remark after meeting Green a few times:

"I would bet $10,000 that no man could meet Fred Green, and be with him an hour, and not admit that he had formed a strong liking for him."

EAST JORDAN WILL WIDEN MAIN STREET

Leading Thoroughfare Too Narrow for Increasing Traffic

East Jordan has found its main street to narrow for the rapidly increasing traffic and work has already started on widening Main street from Williams to State. The project has long been contemplated and when completed, will make auto traffic in that part of the city much easier.

When the original pavement was laid years ago their city officials had the forethought to provide for this in case it was ever found necessary, so the cost of this improvement is at a minimum.

With the widened Main street, its boulevard lighting system, and the recently erected band stand (which is artistic) the citizens may well feel proud of their Main thoroughfare.

Merchants in that part of the city are commencing to install electric signs, and the few we have had for several years will be augmented from week to week, which will add to the street's appearance at night.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS CLOSE TWO-DAY SESSION

A. C. Belding gave a verbal report on the new school census system instigated in the rural districts of the county and state and dwelt in length on the methods being used and the costs of office work in connection with the census.

At the Tuesday afternoon session, the chairman introduced Mr. John Buys of Grand Rapids, who addressed the board at length relative to resort development on Pine lake and recommended that inasmuch as there were some twenty lakes within the state named Pine lake, that it would be well to place a more becoming name than Pine lake as now used and suggested Lake Charlevoix or Lake Charleboyne. After a discussion of the matter by the board they adopted a resolution to rename Pine lake Lake Charlevoix and the prosecutor and chairman and clerk of the board were authorized to prepare and present to the proper departments of the U. S. government resolutions for this change of name.

Wm. Bashaw of East Jordan was elected to act as representntive of Charlevoix county to the state board of equalization at Lansing.

The judge of probate was authorized to procure necessary clerk hire for his office until the October session of the board.

The matter of toll on the Ironton Ferry was rescinded as of action taken last October and the Ironton ferry committee given full power to operate the ferry in accordance with their ideas until the October session of the board.

The Ironton ferry committee was empowered to sell the old ferry scow at the very best sale price possible.

The sessions of the board closed Tuesday afternoon.

BAPTIST CHURCH

The program at the County Sunday school rally at Boyne City last Friday was almost entirely furnished by Charlevoix workers. Why? If other communities in the county had attended and participated as well it would have been a great inspiration. Perhaps they will do better next time.

Charlevoix is looking at her best. Strangers say many times a day, in our presence, "This is the most beautiful town I ever saw." If all our church people would combine we would hear them say, "This is also the best town morally I ever saw." "Come on. Let's go!"

Sorrow comes with the rejoicing—twice the past week we have been called to the house of mourning—Saturday we buried William O'Nell and Tuesday, Mrs. Jones Lewis—both of them old residents of this vicinity.

Dr. Burns will preach morning and evening on Sunday and Bible school will be at noon. The mid-week service has been changed to Wednesday evening on account of the Band concerts on the adjoining lot. The large attendance at these is encouraging.

We are pleased to meet again in our services the resorters who for many years have been Charlevoix summer residents.

CHARLEVOIX COURIER

VOLUME 33. No. 27. EIGHT PAGES. COURIER, CHARLEVOIX, MICH., WEDNESDAY, JULY 7, 1926 PRICE $2.00 PER YEAR

A BIG TIME IN TOWN ON THE 4TH

CROWD AT CELEBRATION WAS A RECORD BREAKER

Maoy Excellent Features of Entertainment Kept Throngs Interested Throughout the Day

Fourth of July was a big day in Charlevoix—big in respect to the number of people who gathered from all parts of the county and from the many attractions offered for their entertainment.

The weather could not have been more perfect, nature smiling upon us in her most benign manner. Bridge street was roped off from Mason street to Park avenue and traffic swung off onto the side streets. One of the most gratifying features of the day was that in spite of the tremendous number of automobiles in town making an endless string of cars throughout the day, not a solitary accident was reported inside the city limits. No disorder of any kind marred the success of the celebration.

We might credit this spirit of orderlyness and scarcity of auto accidents to the fact that at each busy intersection in the city was stationed one of our many aspirants for the office of sheriff at the coming primaries, who seeing this was an excellent chance to present their wares to the people of the county in general, showed unusual ability in handling the situation. Competition is a great thing. But—in this respect, we take our hats off to Len Adams, who gracefully and efficiently showed the crowds how traffic was handled at Miami, Florida. He showed his stuff at the corner of Bridge and Park and, with a few narrow escapes from having his radintor pushed in and fenders smashed, came out of the engagement unscathed.

The program, as planned, was carried out on schedule time, and much credit is due the committee in charge. First honors in the industrinl parade in the morning were carried off by the Loyal Order of Moose, second prize going to Wood Brothers. A large crowd heard the patriotic address given by Rev. Cecil Pollock in the city park and the coast guard drills attracted much attention.

The program of street sports was carried out as scheduled nt 2:00 p. m., attracting a large and enthusiastic crowd. Music by the Boyne City and Charlevoix bands kept the streets resounding to the strains of martial music throughout the day. Boyne City won from the locals in the ball game during the afternoon.

The dance on Bridge street kept the crowd amused during the early evening hours after which an excellent display of fireworks was set off from the shores of Round lake, near the Chicago Club boat house. This feature ended activities for the day, which was one of unusual success.

NOTED EDITOR GAVE ADDRESS LAST SUNDAY

Was Well Received by Congregation at M. E. Church

Rev. W. H. Phelps, D. D., editor of the Michigan Christian Advocate, Detroit, assisted the pastor of the local Methodist Episcopal church in the service last Sunday morning. His address dealt with summer church activity and was well received by a large congregation of people. Dr. Phelps is a unique speaker with a magnetic presence. He is recognized as a leader among Methodists the world around, and the local people feel highly favored to have had this close contact with their editor. Charlevoix Methodists are on the honor roll of the church paper because of their large subscription list. Several more subscriptions were given after hearing and meeting the editor last Sunday. For several years Rev. Mr. Pollock and the editor have been quite intimately associated in church enterprises. The Michigan Christian Advocate is one of the most up-to-date publications of Methodism and is greatly enlarging its circulation under its present leadership.

DIFFICULT MOVING JOB ACCOMPLISHED

Lamphear Cottage Location Adds Beauty to Avenue

One of the neatest and most difficult house moving jobs ever accomplished in this section of the state was that recently completed by Chas. A. Munyon, who moved the big three-story Lamphear cottage on Michigan avenue from its old location across the street where it now stands on lots owned by Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Paddock.

The house is a massivle structure, and not only required moving, but a complete turning around. The feat was accomplished without even tearing down the huge fire-place chimney, and a close inspection of the house fails to reveal a single cracked wall due to moving the building. The work demanded special heavy timbers and material not usually brought into use in a job of this kind. Mr. Munyon is deserving of special commendation for the work accomplished.

The house in its present location adds beauty to Michigan avenue, the heart of Charlevoix's summer colony. It now rests on a fine stone wall, the yard has been filled in and graded, and with the planting of shrubbery and numerous flower beds in contemplation, will be a credit to both its owners and the city as well.

SCHOOL BOARD MEETS MONDAY

SEVERAL MATTERS OF IMPORTANCE TO BE DISCUSSED

Proposition of New School Building to Be Brought Up—Get Out and Voice Your Opinion

Monday, July 12th, is the date set for the annual meting of the Charlevoix school board and it is hoped and expected that there will be a large attendance, as several matters of importance are to be discussed and determined.

Two officials of the board retire at this meeting and others must be elected to take their places. These are Oluf Nordrum and Dr. F. H. Wilkinson, who have efficiently served the board during their term. Whether or not they will be up for re-election is not known.

One of the most important matters which will be discussed at the coming meeting is the proposition of bonding for a new school building. No vote will be taken at this meeting, but a general discussion on the matter will be held. It is the wish of the board that everyone turn out and voice their opinion along this line. Several propositions may be worked out, whether a central school will be built, including high school and grades, thus eliminating the ward schools or whether just a high school building will be built. It is the view of the board to get the taxpayers' point of view on the matter, inasmuch as they are the ones most vitally interested. After it is definitely decided what kind of a building is to be constructed, the matter of bonding the city will be brought to a vote.

Such an important matter cannot be decided by the few who have turned out to meetings in the past. In view of the fact that the board handles anywhere from $48,000.00 to $60,000.00 of the people's money annually, they feel that more should take an interest in the affairs of the schools and turn out at the meetings. On this point they are absolutely right. The small attendance at the annual school meetings in the past is deplorable. The large majority of our taxpayers seem content to sit on the sidelines, take no part in school government, but if matters go against their liking the crabbing starts. The one remedy for this situation is to get out and voice your own opinion.

For State Senator

To the Citizens of the 29th Senatorial District of Michigan:

Having been urged by many to become a candidate for the Senate from this district, and Mr. Pearson having stated to me that if I was a candidate he would not seek a third term, I have decided to submit my name for your consideration at the coming primaries, on the Republican Ticket, assuring you that, if I am chosen to serve you in such a capacity, I will do my utmost to prove worthy of such confidence bestowed in me. Sincerely yours,

HUGH W. DICKEN, M. D.,

DICKEN FOR STATE SENATOR

EAST JORDAN MAN ENTERS THE CONTEST

A World War Veteran, Three Times Mayor of Home City and Qualified to Fill Office

Now East Jordan come out with a candidate for the office of state senator as a successor to W. J. Pearson of Boyne Falls. Dr. Hugh W. Dicken, a resident of that city for some twenty-five years, a world war veteran has made his announcement. The East Jordan Herald has printed a lot of nice, complimentary remarks about his qualifications which we reproduce as follows:

"In printing the announcement of the candidacy of Doctor Hugh W. Dicken for the office of Senator from the 29th Senatorial District, the "Herald" would feel it had neglected a duty if we did not present some of the qualifications of the candidate with a short sketch of his activities in our midst.

"'Doc' was born at Romeo, Michigan, fifty years ago, attended and graduated from the Romeo High School 1893, later attending the University of Michigan and graduating from the Department of Medicine and Surgery of the University in the year 1898, having played end on the University football team in the year 1895.

"Locating first in Emmet county where he was united in marriage with Miss Susie G. Dickenson, daughter of the late Colonel Dickenson, who was for many years county clerk of Emmet county.

"Twenty-five years ago the doctor located at East Jordan, where he has enjoyed a lucrative practice and gained an enviable reputation in his profession.

"During the world war he offered his services to his country, being two years in the American Army, ten months overseas, returning with the rank of Major, 317-Engineers.

"Being interested in the welfare of his comrades, he has been active in American Legion work, and is at present Finance officer of "Rebec-Sweet Post" No. 227 of the American Legion.

"His busy professional life has not kept him from doing his share in connection with all civic matters. Now serving his third term as mayor, and for several years a member of the school board.

"As a friend and neighbor he is unexcelled, in public life he has been progressive and sincere in all things, and his work shows the result of honest, painstaking, conscientious service.

"In choosing a successor to Mr. Pearson, the voters of the 29th Senatorial district can make no mistake in supporting Doctor Hugh W. Dicken."

EARL YOUNG HAS THE RIGHT DOPE

SIGNS MADE BY LEO POWERS ARE ATTRACTIVE

Believes Advertising Pays and Carries Out Novel Ideas to His Profit

No doubt many of our readers have seen the new advertising signs put out by the Earl A. Young Real Estate agency. Considering the fine workmanship and their advertising value to the city, we believe they are worthy of special mention.

The signs are the work of the Leo Powers Sign company. They are cut from sheet metal and painted in attractive colors, duplicating the wooden sign in the window of Young's real estate office. One is located at the corner of the Norwood road and Sherman street and is plainly visible for a half mile down the road. Another is located opposite the 9th hole on the Charlevoix Golf club and is set on the bluff overlooking Lake Charlevoix and is plainly visible from the road in either direction. A third sign is mounted on the roof of the Young office on Bridge street.

Another fine piece of work is the sign recently finished by Powers on the wall of the former Fessenden Drug store at the corner of Bridge street and Park avenue. On the same wall, immediately west of the one already finished, another sign will be added, which will be original in design and no doubt attract considerable attention. It will contain bits of important history about the city of Charlevoix, such as when the city was founded and by whom, the origin of its name, when the different resort organizations were founded, etc. Many people come to the city ignorant of these things and the sign will prove attractive and interesting.

Mr. Young believes in advertising as a business getter. He has carried out this belief and profited by it. The work on the signs mentioned is certainly fine and reflects much credit upon Leo Powers who done the work.

Speaking about advertising—M. Roy Brady returned Thursday morning from the Mississippi Valley Powed Boat association races at Louisville, Ky., with orders to build two hydroplanes, duplicates of the Miss Charlevoix. The publicity he received in entering the races brought him this order, not to mention the publicity Charlevoix-the-Benutiful received at the same time. A complete account of the races will be contained in next week's issue. We're in the newspaper game and believe in advertising as the two gentlemen before mentioned do. Your chances are as good as theirs. Hop on and reap the benefits yourself.

Foolish Season Is Here

SIXTY PRESENT AT FAMILY REUNION

Old School Mates and Friends Gathered for Day in City Park

Friends, relatives and old schoolmates of the Sandy Shearer and Art Alcock families, to the number of about sixty, enjoyed a picnic dinner and reunion in the city park on the Fourth of July. The occasion was a Canadian picnic in honor of James and Laff Alcock brothers of Art, who had not seen each other for twenty-two years and who had not visited Charlevoix since their residence here over twenty years ago.

Those present at the reunion were Laff Alcock and wife of Pontiac; James Alcock and family of British Columbia; Mr. and Mrs. Rnbert Sherman, John Cooper and family and Mr. and Mrs. Will Walker and family of Eveline township; Mr. and Mrs. George Samson of Detroit; Mrs. McIntosh and son of Onaway; Judge Harris and family of Boyne City; Joseph Cooper and his sister, Mrs. Wheeler of California, Mr. and Mrs. Sandy Shearer and family, Len Carey and family, Roy Bowdish and family, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Arnold, Mr. and Mrs. John Burns, Mrs. Hattie Hulmes and daughter, Art Alcock and family, all of Charlevoix. The occasion was indeed a happy one and will be long remembered by all who attended.

CHERRY CROP IS ABUNDANT

EVELINE ORCHARDS REPORT A BUMPER HARVEST

Tea Garden, Just Completed, Is Added Feature at Famous Orchards This Summer

Eveline Orchards, ten miles out from Charlevoix on the East Jordan pavement, will prove even more of a Mecca the present season than in the past.

Frequent showers during the spring and early summer have helped to produce an unusually luxuriant growth of the cherry, plum, and apple trees, which adds to their attractiveness as one motors over the hills south of Cherry Orchard Corners.

The fruit in the 20-acre orchard of sweet and sour cherries is now beginning to color and the earlier varieties will be ripe within a few days. In former years Charlevoix residents and resorters have made frequent pilgrimages to Eveline Orchards to obtain luscious sweet cherries for eating or for sending to friends as souvenirs, as well as of sour cherries for pies and for canning.

Formerly, customers were supplied at a large tent located in the edge of the apple orchard, but this year a special sales booth has been erected. This building will be used for grading and packing the fruit as well as for its sale. Both of these operations will be of interest to visitors. The sweet cherries will be packed in fancy packages for parcel post shipment.

For the thirsty pilgrims, satisfying draughts of iced cherryade and other fruit drinks in season will be provided and plans are under way for a Tea Garden "under the apple trees." Lunch will also be provided at noon.

The cherry crop will be unusually abundant and the fruit will be considerably larger than for the past two years. As soon as the cherries are ready for harvesting arrangements will be made for trips through the orchards. The different kinds will be shown and the methods used in caring for the trees will be explained.

DISASTROUS FIRE AT BOYNE CITY

State Street Garage Goes Up in Smoke Wednesday

The State Street garage, owned and managed by Walter Daniels, of Boyne City, was destroyed by fire last Wednesday night. Six automobiles and a large amount of shop tools and equipment went up in smoke along with the building. Mr. Daniels' loss, so far unestimated, is reported to be about two-thirds covered by insurance.

The garage was one of the busy places of the city. Mr. Daniels was the Hudson and Essex dealer and in addition to servicing these cars he did a general garage business.

COUNTY A 13 MILLION CONCERN

CLASSIFICATION GIVEN US BY UNCLE GEO. H. VANPELT

Says Charlevoix Is an Undeveloped Gold Mine—Still Fighting for Concrete Roads

"Uncle" Geo. H. VanPelt, concrete road advocated, is back from the sunny south and will spend his summer in Charlevoix. One of "Uncle" George's hobbies is concrete roads. He says gravel and soft stuff roads are no good, and the majority of us have reached the same conclusion.

Now he is urging the building of a concrete road around Pine Lake. Says it can be done for about $23,000 per mile, and that the increase in land values and summer tourists will make it one of the best investments the county ever made.

At the opening of the June meeting of the county board of supervisors he was granted the privilege of addressing them. His remarks were as follows:

A few days ago, it occurred to me that in reality our County of Charlevoix is just a Thirteen Million Dollar Concern; for thirteen million dollars is the sum of this county's assets, on which we collect our taxes to run our county government. Then it naturally came to me to compare the administration of this thirteen million dollar concern of ours, and that of any thirteen million dollar enterprise under the management of good, shrewd, American business men.

Right now, before I go any further, let me say that in my 55 years of business experience, I have associated constantly with business men of the highest reputation for successful good judgment. And my observation of their methods, together with my own hard earned experience at the head of a business have led me to some of the conclusions that follow.

We all know that the affairs of our thirteen million dollar business here in Charlevoix County, and those of equally large business concerns, are conducted very differently. That was my first conclusion.

The management of the business affairs of a thirteen million dollar corporation or of a county in any state, is a man-sized job. Only the best equipped, efficient and well-trained organizations can carry the load over the peak and place a profit on the right side of the ledger.

Many a time there is a gold mine right at your door, but we either overlook it, or we may not be able to develop it.

Why do people speak of great men in terms of praise? Simply from the point of view of their having done something worthy the name—great. But only those things are great which tend to render life more happy, or which increase the innocent enjoyments and comforts of our existence.

Charlevoix County, Michigan, is an undeveloped gold mine; and it is high time that we united all our forces in every township in the county to do the great thing with it—to work out, first of all, a plan whereby it can be developed. We cannot make a development in any part of the county, without benefiting the whole county.

We have seen the business in Charlevoix and Boyne City dwindle until it is far below normal. But we have one chance left to recoup and restore and even increase our prosperity far beyond what it ever was. I refer to the Tourist Business.

Here is a cash crop. But as it is today the time for harvesting this crop is really only six weeks. This time can be increased a week or two, both at the beginning and at the end of the season, if we go at it right. And then it can go on increasing, year by year, until it will be six months instead of six weeks.

You wonder how Uncle George is going to show you the way to do this. Now, just look back at last fall. With your roads so much superior to what they were ten years ago, your citizens were able to light out for Florida or California to rest after the strenuous summer, even right up to Christmas time. And with the first waves of the real estate activity beginning to wash this way, land seek-

"We Serve Michigan"

Building Up Markets

THE constituent lines of the Michigan Railroad Association will expend nearly $25,000,000 this year for additions and betterments to the respective properties. These outlays will provide for greater safe-guards to human life, more comfort for the traveling public, increased facilities and better freight service.

Michigan Railroads may justly claim more than their modest slogan—We Serve Michigan. They have contributed to the upbuilding of the industries of the Commonwealth, as perhaps no other group of rail lines in America has done. Two decades of tremendous industrial expansion justified this far-sighted policy of the railroads.

In encouraging industrial up-building, the railroads have also, in a measure, created a Home Market that absorbs the bulk of the products of our farms, orchards, gardens, etc., right at home. So true is this that with increased production, the railroads are annually hauling farm commodities less and less. All of these—except the hay crop—are consumed at home.

THIS tremendous Home Market is the ideal market. But the expansion policy means more. It has created an outlet for similar products grown in other states. The track market at Detroit, for instance, handles 40 different perishable commodities from the cars direct to the dealers—a single transfer only. To illustrate: Fresh tomatoes are found at the green grocers for seven months in the year, thanks to expedited service and the refrigerator car. Shipments are made from Old Mexico and five southern states before the Michigan crop has matured. This is so for the entire list of fruits and vegetables.

With our present railroad system the average wage earner of today enjoys a far wider range of delicacies on his table the year round than did the Kings and Nobles of Europe of a century or more ago.

THE Michigan Railroad Association, then, takes justifiable pride in announcing its program of improvements and betterments for the current year which will further aid the state's industrial advancement, give even greater importance to the Home Market, and contribute still more towards raising the standard of living of all the people.

"Whet nuw, Bill?" he demanded. "Ain't we got enough to face wl'out you fightin' in the cabin?"

"And would ye ha' me take impidence and worse from this red-headed land-rat as Long John picked up in New York?" shouted Bones.

"I'd not," returned Flint. "Darby, you may be my good luck and a lad o' promise, hut I'll lay the cat to your shoulders if you go for to make trouble."

"'Twas him was afther makin' the throuble," answered Durby sturdily. "Wasn't he botherin' Mistbreas O'Donnell? Sure, I'm Irish, the aame as her, and I'll kill the rogue that does be givin' her cause for to weep a tear—that I will. And I care not who he may be!"

"Eesy, all," admonished Flint. "What'a this, Bill?"

"Blow me for a dock-awab if I can see as how ahe'd ougbter be set apart," blustered Bonea. "I'm mate, I am, and if I—"

Flint's bloodshot eyes focuaed upon him with aomething of the silent force thet I had seen Murray employ against his wild crew.

"You know better nor that, Bill," he said qnietly. "Here Long John's just heen to tell me the crew ba' demanded a fo'csle council, and God knows what Allardyce and his gang will be up to. And you want to bust into the middle of Rule Four. Gut me! There'a many things I held against Andrew Murray, but one thing he di' as was the wisest any gentleman adventurer ever done—and it's to his credit no less because Bart Roberts done it before him—and thet was Rule Four."

"A woman's a prize, same as treasnre," grnmbled Bones.

"Oh, no, she ain't! A woman's trouble—she's no prize. You know what happens when there is women ehoard a huccaneer. "I'd throw the wench overhoard if it weren't that she's my best chance to find the stuff Murray hid."

"If harm comes to her you'll get no such knowledge from any of ua," I interposed.

"Oh, belay that!" he rasped. "You're lucky to he elive, and the one reason for it is that ye know what ye know."

He turned to Bones again.

"Now, mark me, Bill, lay off her. When we get thia treasure cleaned up ye can teke all the time ye fancy for wanches or aught else."

"Aye, when we do!"

"And that'll he sooner than ye think," retorted Flint.

"Wl the crew all shoutin' for disbandment? Allardyce talkin' of goin' home tomorrow? I ha' seen ye handle some had times, John Flint, but you're no Andrew Murray!"

The ghe annoyed Flint. His face turned blue, as it did when his temper was fanned or he was in liquor.

"Watch me," he snapped. "I'll learn 'em a few things yet. No Andrew Murray! Maybe not. But I hu' my own way, Bill. Aye, Flint's way! And it ain't so bad."

He suddenly remembered us.

"Keep your moutha shut, d'ye hear? No sneakin' up to John Silver or anyone else. And as for you, my wench—" he frowned at Moira—"keep under cover, for ynur own sake as well as mine. This ia a rough ship, a pirate ship, and—"

"Don't ye worry about Miathress O'Donnell," said Darby loyally. "I'll see to her."

"Oh, ye will!"

Flint laughed.

"You're heginning young, Darby. Gut ma, what a lad! Well, you keep her out o' harm's way, and when we divide the treasure maybe there'll be en extra allowance for ye. How'd ye like to have her, eh?"

"She'll he better worth the havin' then all the treasure there is," flashed Darby. "And do ye be mindin' what I'm afther tellin' ye, Cap'n Flint. If harm comes to her, or sorrow into the heart of her, 'twill be the end o' your luck—aye, lucky ye'll he do ye come off wl' e neck ye can breathe through."

Flint went pale.

"Now, now, Darby," he wheedled. "Don't ye talk that reckless wuy. 'Tain't good for our luck. And I ha' been main kind to ye, and—"

"'Tis you would be the ruin of our inck," said Darby. "All I'm for tellin' ye is to be gentle in hendlin' an elligant young maid as ye ought to be on your two knees before this moment for the trouble and aore dismay ye ha' wrought wl' her."

"She's safe enough, Darby," Flint answered. "I'd never harm her. We'll keep her until we ha' lifted whet's hurled on the Dead Man's Chest, and then she and her two buckos can take a small hoat and fare how they pleaae, and—"

"And I'll he with 'em," added Darby.

"Oh, no, not you, Darby! Think o' all the red gold ye'll have abonrd the Walrus. And there's your luck we'll still need."

"Me luck!" fumed Derby. "May the — curse me luck! 'Tis more of a nuisance than a help."

Flint wes nigh frantic.

"Lad, would ye lose all yonr red head has brought us? And look ye, too, if the maid's to be safe, 'tis I elone can keep her so, for wl'out me there'll be — to pay, and none to stall the reckoning."

"And that before tbis glass is out," affirmed Bones with saturnine emphasis.

The mate knocked the neck off a flask of rum with his cutlass-hilt and poured the equivalent of a water-glass down his throet, gurgling it lustily that he might secure the full savor of the fiery liquor.

"I'll take the rest o' that!" exclaimed Flint eagerly. "Aaa-eah! There's naught like good rum to put heart in a man, Bill. Here, Darby, you finish it. That's the lad! And don't talk me more about losin' your luck. We're goin' to need that luck mighty bad these next few days. Aye, this very day, as Bill says. For here'a Tom Allerdyce and e batch o' chicken-bearted — — e-cryin' we should be satisfied wl' what we got, dishand and ssve our necks. And I don't know what more bilge-slush."

"'Tain't Allardyce I'm 'feared of," said Bonea wisely, "but Silver. He's got a head on his shoulders, Long John has, and all the men'll listen to him after the way he carried the stockade."

Flint nodded.

"True for you; but what yon're amiss on is that John feels same as I do about disbandin'. After the treasure's all lifted, look out for squalls. But right now, Bill, Silver's as strong for pullin' together as you and me."

"Maybe," aald Bonea with more of doubt than conviction.

"Maybe? Gut me for a lubber if I'm not right."

Flint rose from the sest he had assumed.

"You come along on deck, and I'll show ye. You, tno, Darby. No, no, lad"—when Darby would have hung back—"I want ye by me. I tell ye that red head o' yours is the best beacon I ever steered by."

At the exit to the companionway he halted and spoke to us over his shoulder:

"Yon mind what I said abont the girl. Keep her under cover."

"Must we all remain below decks?" I demanded with some heat.

"That'a as ye may happen to feel," he replied carelessly. "So long as ye don't try to suck up to any o' my men and make trouble you can go and come around tha ship: but let me find ye up to mischief, and treasure or no treasure, I'll keelhaul ye."

His green eyes twinkled evilly.

"Maybe Murray told ye whst that might mean."

He gave Darby a push before him.

"Run ont and call the men aft," he commanded. "That's the boy! Bill, —— ye for a low-heerted —— ——, pisster a grin on that mug o' yonrs and pipe na a song. We mustn't let them swabs for'ard figure us to be worriad nona, eh?"

And his voice boomed hollow hetwixt the confined walls of tha companionway:

"Oh, a fine, tall ship was the Elephant
As ever called the seas;
She came down-Channel apast Ushant
Bound for the East Indies.

"And Dicky Lamb, he says to the crew—
He was the hosun's mate—
'Pickle my guts! Will ye do what I do?
Be game, says I; tempt fate!'"

Bones joined valiantly in the sweep of tha tune.

They were ont on deck now, and Flint steyed the song long enough to roar:

"Lay aft, ye swabs! Ye asked for a fo'cale council, and ye shall hsve it. —— me, Bill, can't ye sing londer?"

There waa no answer to this, only tha slapping of hare feet on the deck and tha rustle of men crowded close together.

"Wall fo'cstle," he went on with a note of satire. "Whet d'ye seak? I've heard tell as how there waa talk of givin' me the Black Spot—whatever that may he—end sailin' home by your lones and dead reckonin'. What's the argyment, I aay?"

Tha scene was almost identical with that whicb I had witnessed a few nights previously when I spied npon Flint'a preparationa to surprise Murray. Flint sst, as he had then, upon an npturned barrel, with Bones, Silver, Pew and two or three more. Tbe ramsinder of the crew ware sqnatted on the deck, a semicircular pattern of coppery faces and tattooed chests. The weather had turned warm after tha storm, and practically all of them wore Darby's costnme, a pair of trousers or breeches, usually slashed off above the knees.

Foremost in tho ring of seamen was a tall, lanky fellow with rather long, yellow hair and a belligerent expression. 'Twas he who snstained the bardan of the debate with Flint, supported to some extant by s gronp of a score or so, who sat behind him.

"Aye, aye, Tom Allsrdyce," Flint was saying as we reached onr aerie. "Yon was tha man all agelnst attackin' Murrey."

"Wssn't I right?" retorted Allardyce. "Didn't all happen as I said it would? Butchered, we was."

More Dependable Than Ever

Dodge Brothers, Inc., achieved third place in world production this Spring because they have been able—WITHOUT SACRIFICING FUNDAMENTALS—steadily to improve the smartness, comfort and smoothness of their product.

Owners and engineers know well that mechanically the car is sturdier than ever—cost of upkeep lower—and performance more dependable.

Refinements and lower prices have been made possible by spectacular increases in sales. Not by violating the basic tenet of Dodge Brothers success: NEVER TO LOWER QUALITY IN A SINGLE DETAIL.

He Sold Matches by Telephone in The Dull Season

Business was dull the first of July, so the salesman tried the Long Distance sales plan suggested by the Telephone Manager.

He went to the telephone office in Jackson, gave the operator a list of 20 stores in eight nearby towns and asked that the calls be set up one after another—sequence calls, they are called.

The plan with the consequent saving of money to the match company and therefore to the dealer, appealed. The idea went over big—and so did the matches. And the salesman covered the eight towns in five hours.

REGARDING ACCIDENTS

Men in charge of locomotive engines are skilled in their work. Life is dear to them and the lives of those in the cars behind are also dear to them. The route of a railroad is known and fixed; the route of an automobile is an uncertain factor. As long as the mechanism of a railroad is in perfect condition, the rail without any flaws, and the man at the throttle in full possession of his faculties, all is well.

Yet the element of danger is forever present—a broken rail, a cracked wheel, a fallen tree in the dark, or some other always-expected disarrangement may bring about disaster. Yet no reflection is to cast upon the directing heads of the railroad or its workers. Now and then, of course, the time does come when the fallibility of man results in disaster.

On the other hand, with a few exceptions, disasters by automobile crashes at railroad crossings are the direct result of the drivers of cars failing to "stop, look and listen." Such cases, save in rare instances, are in no sense the fault of the railroad company.

From June 1st until October 1st the railroads of the nation are conducting a careful crossing campaign. The successful issue of that campaign will result in saving many lives, which makes you individually responsible for your own part in helping to point out the danger of carelessness at grade crossings. Human life is too valuable to be so needlessly sacrificed.

INCREASE IN JAP TRADE

The records of the Department of Commerce indicate that American iron and steel trade with Japan increased more than threefold since pre-war times. The Japanese figures show that out of a total import of a million and a half tons in iron steel products in 1924, 320,000 tons, or 22 per cent, originated in the United States. In 1913 the total imports of these products were something more than 800,000 tons, of which this country furnished not quite 12 per cent. It would seem that our advance in the Japanese iron and steel market has been made largely at the expense of the United Kingdom and Germany. In the pre-war year, imports of iron and steel commodities from the United Kingdom to Japan made up 33 per cent of the total, but the percentage dropped to 22½ per cent in 1924. There is a 50 per cent decline in German imports to Japan as between 1913 and 1924.

RESPECT FOR THE LAW

J. M. Stoddard, chairman Executive committee, Washington Press Association and Publisher Empire-Press, Waterville, says:

"Respect for law in our land is not what it should be during the past few years. So numerous and flagrant, and open, have become violations, that drastic action is necessary to check these offenses.

"The Press of the state of Washington believe the time has come when it is necessary to arouse public sentiment to the realization that the laws of our nation must be enforced if our government is to survive.

"Violations of some of the statutes has led to violation of many other laws, with the result that a crime wave has swept the nation and in many localities has been a severe blow. Loss of life, property and money has resulted, and the whole fabric of the law enforcing machinery of our government has been injured far more than the average citizen realizes.

"The effect of law violation has been very harmful, but the condition can be corrected—public conscience must be awakened to the dangers that such a condition brings about. Let every citizen take his stand that any law voluntarily enacted by congress is supreme—it is the will of the majority, and that is the ruling force in American, and must be if our government is to be maintained.

"Let all squarely back the President and the law enforcing officials and see that law violators are punished and stamp out this lawlessness that threatens our homes and our lives. To this end we ask that all give their hearty support to a policy of law enforcement in the State of Washington!"

(Editor's Note—This is one of a series of editorials intended to create in the mind of the public a keener sense of duty toward the laws of the nation and state, prepared by the Washington Press Association and released through the courtesy of this newspaper. The sentiments expressed need not be those of the editor.)

LOCALS LOSE GAME TO DETROIT COLORED TEAM

Two Charlevoix Players Injured During Contest

Charlevoix Independents lost to the Detroit Colored Giants in the baseball game played at the north side ball park Wednesday afternoon. The game was a fast and snappy one as the score of 7 to 5 indicates. The local boys showed much better form than in the game played with Boyne City on the 4th, and will improve with practice.

Two members of the local team were injured during the game, Chester See, Charlevoix pitcher, being struck in the face by a batted ball. His nose was broken and several teeth knocked loose, and he will be laid up for some time. Leo Powers sprained his ankle sliding to second base but is getting around with the aid of crutches.

Sunday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock, the locals will play Central Lake here. A good, snappy game is looked for and local fans are urged to turn out. Dr. W. W. Mitchell is managing the team and the local line-up is as follows: Paul Winder, C; Chester See, P; Leo Powers, 1st B; C. Pumphrey, 2nd B; Clary, ss; Hickman, 3rd B; Powell, Betts, McCann, fielders.

Claimed that to spank a child shows one's failure as a parent. The children will will say so anyway.

The world will have peace when the men in it become spiritual brothers. The trouble is that many of us would rather have a little warfare.

DAYS OF REAL SPORT

The other day we were thinking back to the time we took a "certain party" to a circus. After the big show we decided to remain for the concert, and when changing seats for a location more desirable, stepped upon the young lady's dress skirt and the accident prevented us from attending the concert. We would have to be a high stepper today to step on a young lady's dress skirt.

A contribution in the collection plate is one defense against modern evils.

NEW PALACE THEATRE

ATTRACTIONS FOR THE COMING WEEK

Friday and Saturday, July 9 and 10

"THE WANDERER," with Ernest Torrence, Greta Nisson, Wm. Collier, Jr., Wallace Beery, Tyrone Powers and Kathryn Williams. What a theme for a motion picture! And how perfectly William Collier, Jr., portrays the role of the first Black Sheep. The story of the Prodigal Son of Long ago, who left home for the wine, woman and song of a wicked city. Fox News Reel. EXTRA—Educational Comedy, "Mr. Cinderella." Prices Adults 50c, Children 25c.

Sunday and Monday, July 11 and 12

Gloria Swanson in "THE UNTAMED LADY." She had twenty millions and an ungovernable temper. Come and see men try to tame her. A thoroughly spoiled and yet thoroughly lovable daughter of wealth, placed in a position whereby she becomes absolutely and irrevocably "tamed." EXTRA—Educational Comedy, "Nobody's Business."

Tuesday and Wednesday, July 13 and 14

"SWEET DADDIES," with Jack Mulhall and Jobyna Ralston. All the way from Florida to New York and out to sea—the laughs and the thrills follow as sure as night follows day and about a million times faster. Made by the man who gave you "Classified."

Thursday and Friday, July 15 and 16

"THE RAINMAKER," with Ernest Torrence, Wm. Collier, Jr., and Georgia Hale. Jockey Robertson, "The Rainmaker," they called him. Owners of mudhorses hired him. The others paid him to stay away. See how a dramatic turn of events enables him to save an entire town from fire and plague. A story that is a sensation. EXTRA—Educational Comedy, "Time Flies."

MAJESTIC THEATRE
Saturday and Sunday, July 10 and 11

Buck Jones in "THE COWBOY AND THE COUNTESS," shows a highly original story of a troup of cowboys on an exhibition tour of Europe. Besides a very original plot, the story is full of action and thrills from start to finish. EXTRA—Educational Comedy, "Sky Bound."

For those who want to build their own, I have lots; for those who want modest houses, I have them costing as little as $1500; and for those with money and ambitions, I have such opportunities as a certain lake front estate with improvements that cost $75,000—but all for sale at $55,000.

"The Uotomed Lady" Heods Palace Program

If "The Untamed Lady," coming to the Palace Theatre, had nothing more to recommend it than the fact that Gloria Swanson stars in it, it would still be well worth seeing, for Gloria can always he depended upon for a capitol performance.

Lots of Duffy's on the World's Stage

One of the largest theatrical families extant is that of the clan of Duffy. Jack, scion of that tribe from County Cork, is one of the leading comedians in pictures, while his sister, known professionally as Kate Price, has lately come into her own in Hollywood as a character actress.

Fifteen children blessed the home of Jack and Kate's parents, and all but four are on the stage. Duffy plays the humorous role of the Judge in M. C. Levee's First National picture, "Sweet Daddies," which comes to the Palace Theatre July 13-14.

"Cowboy and Countess" Is Full of Action

Sixty Millioos Dollars Worth of "Extres" Act in "The Reinmoker"

Sixty million dollars worth of extras"!

That Is a conservative estimate of the wealth represented at the Tanforan raco track, near San Francisco, when hundreds of San Francisco's leading social leaders and society debutantes acted as "extras" in the race track scenes of "The Rainmaker." Palace Theatre, Thursday and Friday, July 15-16.

METHODIST CHURCH
C. E. Pollock, Minster

"The Heart of Fellowship," sermon next Sunday morning at 10:30. The "Lord's Supper" will follow the sermon. The adequate facilities for serving this sacred rite make it possible to accommodate the entire congregation very quickly, so that the service will not be unduly prolonged. Every person who desires to participate, regardless of church membership or non-church membership, will receive a welcome at this service.

"Ships That Pass in the Night," story sermon subject at 7:30 p. m. next Sunday. A great feature service that lasts one hour, with good music planned.

Miss Ellen Cook, a Western State Normol student, will lead the Epworth League next Sunday evening at 6:30. This young people's service lasts one hour only, and is entirely in charge of tha young people. Don't get lonesome in "Charlevoix-the-Beautiful," but get acquainted. There were about one hundred at this service last Sunday evening. Something different each service.

Prayer meeting each Thursday evening at 7:30. This stabilizing service is valuable. Many are finding it so. Be one each Thursday evening during the good old summer time.

BAPTIST CHURCH

"Growth in Grace" will be the theme of the pastor's sermon at 10:30 Sunday morning..

At 12:00 m. the Bible school will study the international lesson. The studies in the Old Testament are very much "up-to-date" lessons, and if well learned would greatly help some of our national leaders. Please call their attention to them.

At 7:30 p. m. the pastor will conduct a preaching service. A popular theme.

The public and especially tourists are cordially invited to worship with us.

STATE RULES ON LICENSE LAW

THEIR DECISION WILL PLEASE THE FARMERS

Pleasure Cars May Be Used by Them to Haul Produca to and from Market Place

The Michigan department of safety has issued the following statement concerning the department's attitude toward the use of pleasure automohiles for hnuling fnrm produce to market:

"Act 302 of the Public Acts of 1915 as amended by the legislature in 1925, which defines 'eommercial vehicles used for the transportation of passengers for hire nnd those constructed or used for the transportation of goods, wnres or merchandise, might be interpreted as prohibiting the use of plensure cnrs for hauling small amounts of grain or produce to town or the hnuling of sample cases, camp equipment, etc. However, this department does not place that interpretation on the law. We believe that n farmer or any other citizen has the right to use his pleasure cnr for the hauling of his own produce to town or for hauling other nrticles of merchandise for himself, without being eompelled to purchase a commereial liecnse for the car. We believe that the legislature intended this particular section to apply only to those vehicles used or constructed solely for the purpose of hnuling pussengers for hire or for hauling freight.

This department will not make any nrrests for alleged violations of this section of the lnw where a pleasure vehicle may be used to haul produce or personal goods by the owner."

COUNTY A 13 MILLION CONCERN

ers were able to get in here from the south until very nearly the first of the year.

It wns all due to good roads—an increased confidence in the feasibility of motor travel, which will extend to the tourists, as they learn thnt the roads are here for them. Good rouds will extend our season just as they have extended it elsewhere.

But when we consider this plan to make us all richer, we must guard against any schemes which seek to influence us, without sound foundation in fnct and experience—which are not for the good of ourselves, our friends, the taxpayers of this county. We want to begin our planning to make this thirteen million dollnr concern pay, just as shrewdly as those aforementioned hard-headed business associates of mine planned and did make their companies shower down the gold.

If they had the problem thnt we have, or if I had hnd it when I was running my business profitably, it would have been figured out from fnets like the following:

Twelve years ngo, when this county was bonded for $350,000, each of the three cities wns allotted $100,000, and Boyne Falls received $50,000. Now, Charleviox went uhead and put its money into 12 miles of concrete road, which is today worth the entire amount of the bond issue —$350,000—and has not cost n cent for repairs. Compare this with the cost of rebuilding nnd repairing tbe gravel roads built by the other towns at the same time. Charlevoix's investment went to a profit-making property that has run itself at practically no expense, and has appreciated immensely in value.

The others spent their money for gravel roads. Now, the most that can be said for their roads is that they are graded; and the grading they did, worth three to four thousand dollars a mile, will today reduce the cost of building concrete roads by just that much.

Concrete roads were built last year for $23,000 a mile; but with us, because wnter and gravel are more convenient and accessible to operations, our roads should be built for the same amount, even including grading, bridges and all. So it is safe to say that a concrete road around Pine Lake, with from three to four thousand dollars worth of grading per mile already done, could be completed for $20,000 per mile; and that is with the reservation that no road today should be less than 20 feet wide.

Gentlemen, I have studied this aubject not only because I have lived in Charlevoix County for 43 yenrs, but also because for many years I was a member of the good roads committee of the Chicago Association of Commerce where I saw all kinds of roads built under all kinds of conditions. 'Twas there I learned whnt I know nbout concrete roads.

The price of learning wisdom establishes the truism that only by putting into praetiee the good things we know, enn we proceed and build up for our county n nntional as well as a state-wide reputation as the best and most beautiful tourist's resort in the United States.

For 43 yenrs I have devoted all my spnre time, as well as much of the time while engaged in business, talking of the beautiful, health-giving properties of our pure water nnd our water-washed air. No place on earth can excel this. So, boys, why not spend our money and our time advertising it to bring the tourists here. Nothing we can do for them will bring them so quickly as will concrete roads—and especially a good concrete road around Pine Lake.

MAYTAG WASHER SIGN ONE OF NEW SIGHTS

Hundrads of Lights Used to Show Machine in Operation

One would ordinarily think of at least 15,000 places to look for washing machines before thinking of Times Square, Broadway. Yet the fact is that the Maytag machine is now to be found in the very heart of America'a night life center.

Over forty feet high and thirty-five feet wide, this giant among washing machines towers above the nightly Broadway throng.

Etched in brilliant lights, every essentinl detail clearly outlined by a myriad of lamps, the marvelous electric spectacular displny is the new electric display of Times Square.

Crowds pause on their wuy to theatre, cabaret or movie, to watch its fascinating nction. Beside the steady-burning Maytng name, in itself nbout forty-five feet long, the elcetrie light reproduction of the latest Maytag washer model flashes on. The motor revolves. Bursts of light flash to all pnrts of the sign giving vivid suggestion of the gyroscopic action within the washer, while the clothes are being washed. The lid goes up. One by one, through the revolving wringer come dainty "undies," hose, towels, baby things, each detail in electrie outline. As if by magic, they pass to the seventy-foot aerial elothes lines and they string themselves ncross the Manhattan skyline, all the while swaying to and fro as if stirred by the blowing breezes.

Some conception of the amount of material and the skill and amount of labor involved in creating this masterpieee of eleetric display construetion is gained from the details of the various units of the display.

In the washer, whieh is 40 ft. by 35 ft. there are some 2,000 twenty-five watt white lamps. On the clothes line, the large garments are 9 ft. high and eontain about 60 twenty-five watt colored lamps while the smaller garments average 4½ ft. high and eontain from thirty to fifty bulbs each. To reproduce the clothes line, with the garments and the swaying action, requires nearly one thousand lamps.

The name "Maytag" is in ten-foot letters, und contains 500 fifty-watt lnmps, while it takes 225 twenty-five watt lamps to spell out "Aluminum Washer." Each of the three message-flashes requires approximntely 600 twenty-five watt lamps.

The whole aetion of the display brings into play the brilliance of some 5,500 lamps—a volume of light which would provide illumination for every household in a whole city the size of Logansport, Ind., or Lawrence, Mass.

THREE SMALL FIRES OVER LAST WEEK END

Very Small Damage Resulted from Any of the Blazes

The fire department was called out to three small blazes over the week end. Little damage resulted from any of the fires.

The first alarm was turned in last Friday, shortly after noon, from the John Wineman residence on the north side. An oil stove blaze-up was the cause, and the fire was out before the department arrived. A small blaze at Bersaw's restaurant caused little damage Sunday morning and, although the department answered the alarm, the fire had been extinguished before their arrival.

An electric flat iron, left turned on during the night, burned through the ironing board, dropped onto the floor burning through that and started a small fire between the partitions at the Godchaux cottage on Michigan avenue last Tuesday morning, the alarm being turned in at 4:00 a. m. Prompt and efficient action by the department kept the damage down to a very small extent.

Harry Webster, tender on the P. M. railroad bridge, had a narrow escape from drowning last Monday, while catching minnows with a throw net from the piers beneath the bridge.

Webster was throwing the heavy net from the pier east of the bridge and was in the act of pulling it in when the rope broke, making him lose his balance and fall backwards into the water. He was unable to swim and after sinking a couple of times, grasped hold of one of the piles and finally pulled himself out of the lake. There was no one near the scene of the accident and Harry considers himself lucky in getting out alone.

TWO YOUNG MEN NEARLY DROWN

CANOE CAPSIZED CLOSE TO INN DOCK IN PINE LAKE

Rescuing Boat Also Tipped Over—Trio Saved When Log Was Paddled Out to Them

Bill Houston and Harold Rainke, members of the Inn working crew, nearly lost their lives by drowning in Lake Charlevoix (Pine Lake) Mondny evening at about 8 o'clock, when the canoe in which they were rlding capsized near the Inn dock, throwing them into the water.

Attracted by shouts for "help," members of the crew and guests of the hotel rushed to the beach and saw two heads bobbing up in the water about two hundred yards or more from the shore. Houston who was unable to swim, was being held from sinking by Rainke, and the struggle to keep him afloat was fast ebbing the younger lad's strength, although he refused to leave his drowning companion. Matters were still more complicated when Harry Eastman went to the rescue of the two men in a canoe which was also upset in their efforts to climb aboard, throwing all three into the water.

The situation was saved by the presence of mind of Jimmy Flynn and Delmar Fechette, who paddled out to the struggling men on a log, which they grasped hold of and were towed to shore. Houston was in a drowning condition when brought ashore and his escape from denth was a narrow one.

Much credit is due for the heroism shown by Harold Rainke, who remined at the side of his drowning companion until help reached the scene, although he was in an exhausted condition himself. Flynn and Fechette also deserve much credit for their presence of mind. Guests at The Inn who witnessed the struggle, are high in their praises for the heroism shown by the young men and have expressed their intentions of seeking a Carnegie medal for the heroes.

WOULD THAT WE COULD HEAR THIS FROM ALL SIDES

Oh, boy! Wouldn't it be wonderful to walk the full length of Bridge street and hear on every hand something that might truly be said about the advantages of Charlevoix; something that would tend to refresh one's memory of those delightful summer days that have passed and that are to come; something that would picture the beauties of our autumns in all the colors dame nature pnints them; something that would stimulate a deeper respect and interest in the splendid institutions of the old home town; something that would bring to the fore the importance of our schools, our churches, library, beautiful summer hotels and homes, the air we breathe, the water that courses its way through our city nnd washes its boundnries; something that would cause one to thirst for nnother drink of the purest, sweetest, freshest water that comes from our city supply.

Wouldn't it be sweet music to hear our virtues praised and our frailties "written upon the snnds?"

Imagine, if you can, whnt an influence would be wielded if we'd stop our howling about the backward season, changenble weather, (they nre hnving the same everywhere, north, east, south nnd west), and pick up n horn and blow into the ears of the world n harmony sweeter than any played or sung by our south nnd west brothers, where to complain is a crime.

FINANCES ARE IN GOOD SHAPE

BOARD OF EDUCATION HAS MONEY IN BANK

Conditions of School Affairs Made Public in Reports of Secretary and Treasurer

Some one hundred sixteen residents of Charlevoix, eligible to vote on affairs pertaining to the running of our public schools, were present at the annual school meeting last Monday evening. This is very gratifying both to the board and teaching staff, as it shows that the people of the city are interested in local school affairs.

The meeting was called to order promptly at 8:00 o'clock by Mrs. Lena Bergeon, president of the board. Following a few introductory remarks came the reading of reports of the secretary, treasurer and librarian.

The report of the treasurer was the most satisfactory we have heard during the past 18 years. It showed the finances of the district were in excellent shape and that enough money was being raised by taxation to carry on all school activities without being forced to borrow funds with accompanying interest charges.

In the selection of trustees for the full three-year term, Olum Nordrum was re-elected to succeed himself. In his speech of acceptance, Mr. Nordrum stated he had already served ten years on the board, and would continue to render faithful and efficient service as long as he was a member of the board.

On the fourth ballot, Alonzo Powers was found to be the choice of the voters, in a field of eight or nine. Mr. Powers during his long residence here has always been interested in school affairs, and a booster for the betterment of school conditions. We believe he will render efficient service during his tenure of office.

The meeting then resolved itself into a general discussion of school affairs, the urgent need of better school buildings being the most important theme. A motion was made and carried, instructing the board to secure plans, specifications and estimates of costs of a suitable building, which in their judgment is needed, and to present them at a public meeting to be called at a later date.

It was also moved and carried to raise an extra five mill tax to provide a sinking fund, so that when building operations began, necessary funds would be available before a bond issue was carried out.

It was generally acknowledged that our present buildings were antequated and had passed their day of usefulness, nnd that if Charlevoix continued to hold her place in educational affairs, better housing facilities must be provided.

HINTS ON THE CARE OF CREAM

LACK OF PROPER CARE CAUSES ENORMOUS LOSSES

Blue Valley Creamery Institute Issue the Following as Aids to Local Producers

Lack of proper care of cream on the farm in warm weather is costing farmers thousands of dollars annually, according to the Blue Valley Institute. Since three times as much milk and cream is produced on the farm in summer than in winter, proper care given to cream during the warm weather determines to a large extent the farmer's income from his cows for the year. This is especially true now when better creameries pay a premium for sweet cream.

With a view of helping farmers in the care of their cream in warm weather, the following "hints" have been prepnred by the Institute:

Cleanliness of utensils and low temperature are the controlling factors that determine the quality of cream. An unwashed separator contaminates the cream of the next separation, and high temperature does the rest. Cream produced under such conditions will not only become intensely sour but is also likely to become yensty and foamy. Further, it will develop a disagreeable odor. In all, it mnkes a very poor quality of butter which always selis nt bottom prices. The use of clean utensils and washing the separator after each separation by taking the bowl apart, will prevent this.

Milk should be separated after each milking, and the cream at once set in a tank, barrel or tub of water as cold as possible. Stir the cream a few times to hasten the cooling. Do not set the cream can on the pack porch or under a tree expecting the air to cool the cream. Water cools the cream 21 times as fast as does nir, even in parts of the country where the water gets quite warm in summer. In the absence of a running spring, fix up a cooling tank between the pump and watering trough. Any big tank, tub or barrel may be used that is large enough to hold two cans, a shipping can and a small can. Hold the warm cream in the small can till it is thoroughly cooled, then add the cold cream to that in the shipping can already cooled. Never pour warm cream in cold cream. If you do, you will simply have a larger batch of warm cream to cool down again.

Deliver or ship the cream as often as possible. The longer the cream is kept on the farm the more time it has to spoil. In hot weather cover the cream with a wet blanket while it is taken to the station. See to it that it is not allowed to stand in the hot sun while waiting for the train.

Dog Days

HARVEST OF HAY TWO WEEKS LATE

Crops Look Wall Although Not Far Advancad

A trip out through the farm country south of Charlevoix Sunday disclosed that farmers are about two weeks late in making their hay crop, owing to the late spring and slow growing weather. Hay has made unusually fast growth during the first two weeks of July until, in many seetions, the yield will be up to normal.

In some sections the crop will be light is the report of some interviewed. Field after field had been cut and the newly cut grass lay in neat windrows awaiting the proper curing and harvesting.

With the corn crop, it is different. Many nicely cultivated fields were seen, but the corn will average less than a foot in height, unless the days and nights are warmer, the crop will be very light.

Few fields of potatoes were seen, and this has been a source of wonderment to us. At farms where usually from three to five acres are planted, but small patches were seen, and in a 40-mile drive, but three small fields of wheat were seen.

An abundant crop of cherries is in sight. Strawberries are about gone, and were scarce throughout the season.

DEATH CLOSES ACTIVE CAREER

MRS. SILAS J. ALCOX PASSED AWAY AT HOME WEDNESDAY

Was President of W. C. T. U. for Twenty-one Years—Active in Church Work

The community is saddened by the death of Mrs. Jennie Metcalf Alcox, which occurred early this morning (Wednesday, July 14, 1926) at her home on Antrim street.

Mrs. Alcox spent her early life in Uxbridge, Ontario, and was married there on December 27, 1876, to Silas J. Alcox. Five children were born to this union, Herbert, Morley, Nellie, Forest and Eula. In 1882 the family moved to Charlevoix, where they have since resided.

Mrs. Alcox has been in failing health for n long time which was partly due to her devoted care for her husband, who has been an invalid for nine years. Last Tuesday she became suddenly worse and was unconscious much of the time until the end came.

She is survived by her husband and one son, Herbert, also five brothers and sisters, viz: Mrs. Chns. Arnold, Miss Annie Metcalf and Mrs. Hattie Hulme of Charlevoix; Frank Metcalf of Central Lake, and Geo. Metcalf of Muskegon.

Mrs. Alcox has been a loyal nnd consecrated member of the Methodist church since her girlhood. She was greatly interested in welfare work, especially along temperance lines, nnd gave the best years of her life to active service in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, having been president of the local union for twenty-one years and having held vnrious offices in the county and district organizations.

Gentle and unassuming though she was in her manner, she made many friends and a large circle besides her immediate family will mourn her pnssing.

Funeral services will be held Friday at 4 p. m., from the Methodist church, Rev Cecil E. Pollock, officiating. Interment at Brookside.

Members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union will meet in the M. E. church parlors and attend the funeral of Mrs. Alcox in a body.

HOOKED ONTO A 52-INCH MUSKIE IN BLACK RIVER

A resorter fisherman got snagged onto a denizen of the upper Black river while trolling one evening this week and after wrestling with the old resident for a long while finally landed a submarine in the shape of a 52-inch muskalonge.

Al. Weber of the Cheboygan Democrat, in commenting on the catch, says:

"Bet that boy will never stop coming back to the Black to fish every chance he gets from now until Gabriel toots the final toot for him to come home to fishermen's paradise. Who would every stop going back where such fightin' fellows have their haunts, 'cause one never knows at what time one of the old boys will rear out from his weedy retreat, strike the bait, and make off across the lake with it."

"Everything don't go right from the beginniu'," answered Flint. "But just look where we be now, mates."

"It ain't your doin'," asserted Allardyce. "'Twas only blind luck as the storm wrecked Murray and ws rods it out."

"Aye, and a'pose a frigate jumps us?" called one of the men sitting with Allardyce.

"Depends on the frigate, man," answered Flint equably. "A Spnnieher I'd fight. A king's ship I'd run from. A Frenchy—I don't know."

"The ship's foul. We conldn't run," eald Allardyce. "No, mates, I say we ha' eight hundred thousand pounds, and we'd better be satisfied wi' tbat. 'Tis a couple o' thousand ponnds apiece."

"Aye, aye," came from a number of men. "Disband while the luck's wi' us."

"Disband wi' eight hundred thousand pounds more as good as in our pockets!" exclaimed Flint. "I never heard crazier talk."

"Better live wi' eight hundred thousand pounds thun lose a third o' us to win twice that," insisted Allardyce doggedly.

There were expressions of opinion both ways upon this; the company was fairly well divided. And Allardyce proceeded to press his advantage.

"If ye talk about losin' riches, cap'n, 'tis you are willing to risk losing the eight hundred thousand pounds we have in hand. Ye'd go for the other treasure and most likely lose what we already have."

Flint squinted reflectively at the yellow-haired man.

"Now that might be a good argyment, Allardyce, if 'twas true," he remarked. "But it ain't. The truth is, I am all for makin' the treasure we have safe before we go cruisin' to the Dead Man's chest. Treasure is a poison on shipboard if ye ain't got a sure use for it. That's why I had ye leave ashore the lot Murray moved to the blockhouse. It's out o' the ship."

Allardyce lost his temper.

"Aye, ye want it where ye can get your hand on it, and give us the slip!"

"How'd I do that, Allardyce?" inquired Flint softly.

"If I knowed how you were plannin' to do it I'd stop ye."

"Ah, stop me, would ye?"

"I would! There's other men ha' marooned or murdered the half o' a ship's company that there might be fewer to share in the prize."

"That's kindly of ye," said Flint. "I take that real kindly! There's some Allardyce, as might draw pistol for that. No, no, put up your weapon! I'm u-goin' to prove to ye, whether ye like it or not, thut I mean well by ye. I'll tell ye what I'll do.

"First off, mates"—he addressed the whole crew—"do ye or don't ye want to win eight hundred thousand pounds more wi'out havin' to fight for it?"

A fair majority were in favor of this.

"Second, mates, are ye willin' as the treasure we have shall be buried here on the Rendezvous until we ha' fetched back the part that's buried on the Dead Man's Chest?"

"Who's to bury it?" put in Allardyce sullenly. "'Tis easy for a few men to bury treasure so's none save theirselves can find it—and if they disappear suddenlike, what'll their shipmates do?"

"There's sense in that," agreed Flint. "Let's say as you and me bury it, Allardyce."

The yellow-haired man shook his head.

"There'd be one of us come back—and 'twouldn't be me."

"Got a great idea o' me, ain't ye?" mocked Flint. "But s'posin' ye took along some friends? Would ye feel safe then?"

"How many?"

Flint turned to Silver, whose hard eyes had been studying the faces of both parties to the debate.

"How many would ye say, Long John?"

Silver's big face split in a smile of derisive quality.

"Seein' as you're one o' the party, cap'n, maybe we might say five—six includin' himself."

"Ye think he'd be safe from me wi' five friends along?" asked Flint earnestly.

"How'd I Do That, Allardyce?" Inquired Flint Softly.

"Six is a good number for buryin' treasure," replied Silver, grinning broader than ever. "And with you 'twould be seven—and seven's lucky."

Flint regarded him admiringly.

"Wouldn't ye know 'twould take Long John to think o' that? Seven is lucky, says he! Ah, yes, and who for? Well, Allardyce, what d'ye say? Will ye feel safe wi' six friends?"

Several men laughed.

"Yes," answered the yellow-haired man.

"Then that's settled," said Flint. "Pick 'em now. We'll start settin' the treasure ashore at once. You and your friends and me, we'll go off soon as that's finished. Bill-Bones will take command o' the Walrus."

"How long will ye be?" asked Bones, smiling in a knowing way.

Flint hailed Allardyce, who was already deep in conversation with his group of supporters.

"How long d'ye figure it should take to stow away the two lots of treasure, Allardyce? We'll put the gold and coined silver in one cache and the bar silver in another."

"How do I know?" snarled Allardyce.

"'How does he know?' says he," Flint echoed gravely. "Tell ye what, Bill, you just stand off and on, and when we're ready to come aboard we'll row out a' the Anchorage. That's simple enough, ain't it? No chance for misunderstandin' or aught goin' wrong."

Peter and I ducked into our stateroom as the two came aft. They went into Bones' room, which was next to Moira's, and for some time we could hear them talking in low tones. When they came out Flint was saying:

"Mind, Bill, an easy rein, but give [illegible] leave the wench [illegible] may make endless [illegible] with a blistering string [illegible] we're at [illegible]," he wound up, [illegible] John make odds o' six [illegible] it's plum daff to Silver if [illegible] happens to ye," remonstrated the mate.

"Don't ye worry, Bill. There'll be no man in this crew willing to lift a finger after I come aboard again. Where's my Flemish pistolets?"

When they were finally gone I looked an unspoken question at Peter.

"Ja," he said.

"But six to one! Why?"

"Ha wants der treasure where only ha can reech it. Ja, dot's it."

The morning of the sixth day I was awakened by a considerable clamor on the deck, and Darby McGraw danced into my stateroom, so excited that his brogue was nigh incomprehensible.

"Heste ye! Haste ye, Master Bob!" he cried. "'Tis Flint comin' off, and him by his lone."

I roused Peter, and we threw on our clothes and ran out upon the main deck, which was crammed with pirates, staring in rept suspense across the starb'd bulwerks. The sun was just rising, and the island shelved upward, darkly portentous, from the creamy lether of the surf. The Walrus was standing south, with the White rock on her starb'd quarter and the entrance to Captain Kidd's anchorage ahead. Outside the entrance, and pulling up to meet us, was the gig we had left behind for the convenience of Flint and his companions. A single figure with a light-blue scarf wrapped around his head, rowed at the oars.

"But how be certain 'tis Flint!" I exclaimed. "His back is toward us, and at this distance—"

"Beggin' your pardon, Master Ormerod," said Silver at my elbow, "we has' made him out wi' glasses. Bill"—he waved his free hand toward the poop, where Bones strode up and down by the helmsman—"is surs o' him."

The one-legged man suggered and lowered his voice.

"Ye ain't surprised, are ye?" he asked.

"Six to one!" was all I could think to say.

"Ja," agreed Peter, chuckling.

Silver sniggered again.

"Aye, six to one. A strong, desperate feller is Flint. Now what d'ye reckon he'll do wi' the map?"

"What map?"

"When ye bury treasure ye draws a map," Silver explained ornerily. "If so he as one man knows where 'twee buried and he has the map that treasure is safe till doomsday—'nless someone else gets the map."

"Well, he won't give me the map," I returned shortly.

Honeymooning with the aid of Long Distance

They were married in Saginaw—and John and Mary left on a tour of Michigan that would take them to Detroit, Ann Arbor, Lansing, Grand Rapids and up to Petoskey; thence across the Straits of Mackinac.

Wise John changed plans, at the last moment, to outwit the well-wishing jokers, however.

And so he telephoned ahead, changed hotel reservations and got into touch with Aunt Jane at Grand Rapids, a friend at Petoskey and another at Sault Ste. Marie. The value of Long Distance appealed to him.

MISS CHARLEVOIX FAILED TO PLACE

Engine Trouble Forces Bradys to Quit Both Races

The Miss Charlevoix, local entry in the Mississippi Valley Power Boat association races held recently at Louisville, Ky., failed to place in the money in either heat of the 725 hydroplane class, on account of unfortunate mishaps. In the first day's race n slipping clutch forced her out of competition and in the second heat the following day, a broken oil line forced her out again in the last lap of the race. When compelled to withdraw, Miss Charlevoix was holding third place and stood an excellent chance of so finishing. A speed of 59.22 miles per hour was made by Brady's boat in the mile qualifying trials.

The races at Louisville established three new world records, in the 151 and 725 hydroplane classes, also in the outboard motor races. The remarkable speed of 23.383 miles per hour was attained by boats equipped with Johnson outboard motors, breaking all former records. In the 151 hydroplane class a new world's record of better than 42 miles per hour was hung up by the Little Star. Mr. Brady now has orders to build two hulls, and possibly a third, exact duplicates of the Little Star, for Bill Frey and D. A. Buckley of Madison, Wis. These boats will be raced in both Florida and California this winter.

TIMELY SUBJECTS DISCUSSED BY W. C. T. U.

Think Candidates Should Make Prohibition Views Public

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union met last Fridny with Mrs. Kibby to continue the discussion of last month's topic, namely, "Community Housekeeping."

Some new muterial was presented and after a prolonged discussion the president was authorized to appoint special committees on city park, church co-operation and parent teacher meetings.

It was the unanimous opinion of the meeting that every candidate for election this fall should state publicly his position on the prohibition question.

All members of the Charlevoix Union are urged to plan to attend the county rally at Whiting Park on August 6th.

She was a student in the local high school and was in her junior year. Besides her parents, she is survived by a sister, Jenn, her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Graves, and other relatives.

The tea room was very prettily decorated with festoons of English and ox-eye daisies and the color scheme of orange and blue was carried out on the place cards and table decorations. Fruit cocktail wns served in dainty orange baskets, made from the fruit itself, the baskets being fastened with blue flowers. Cards followed the luncheon and the affair was a decided success.

BE SURE AND VISIT THE MANY AUTO PARKS

Places of Beauty That Should Not Be Overlooked

One best take an auto trip and visit Northern Michigan's parks and resort places to appreciate the magnitude of the tourist business and how necessary it is to blow one's horn about the advantages nnd the beauties of his own particular resort place. There are thousands of people traveling and they get into some of the most out of the way places it seems, attracted there by the lure ns described to them by picture and story or the report of some friend. It pays to put one's bet foot forward nnd tell about your advantages for all you're worth.

Card of Thanks

We wish to thank our neighbors and friends for their kind assistance during the illness nnd death of our husband and father, John Bottema. We especially thank the pastor for his comforting words and the singers who sang at the services. Mrs. John Bottema, Joe, Martin and Dorothy Bottema.—Adv. 28t1pd

Dairy Club Members Meet

Nevels Pearson, assistant State Club Leader visited Charlevoix county on July 7th and 8th and accompanied by County Agent Mellencamp, met with the members of the club.

The first meeting was at Fred Wurns', East Jordan, where four members were present. Mr. Pearson gave the young dairymen a demonstration of how to fit their animals for the show to be held at East Jordan during the county fair and discussed the care and attention that should be given in order for them to develop normally. The boys were interested and have been working hard to learn how to properly mange their young stock.

The next stop was at Sam Straw's, Charlevoix, where all the members from that section were on hand and glad again to have Mr. Penrson with them. These members having been in the club last year were given a practical judging demonstration. The points to be considered in choosing the best dairy animals were discussed and explained, after which three cows were selected for a class and each boy had to place them. In addition each boy had to give his reasons why he had placed them the way he did. It was indeed very gratifying to see how well the members had learned in such a short time to judge dairy cows. Watch out fathers or your son will be a better judge than you are.

Thursday forenoon eight club members were met at Fred Larsens, East Jordan, in the last meeting of the visit. As was the case previously, fitting and judging demonstrations were given to prepare the members for the county fair.

The big event that all club members are hopefully anticipating is the Club Camp for Northern Michigan at Gaylord from August 17th to August 20th, inclusive, where it is hoped all the club members can attend. This is the first time that club members have had a camp where they can play and work and meet each other. The expenses will not be over $3.50 and as a result all can afford to go and have the big fun. At the same time two or three judging teams will be selected to go to the state fair and surely Charlevoix county will fight hard to be one of them.

At the present time twenty-one boys and girls from this county are enrolled in Dairy Club work, three more boys having been added to the club as follows:

Earl Stallard, East Jordan, Jersey cow.

Oswald Hosegood, East Jordan, Jersey calf.

Harvey McPherson, East Jordan, Guernsey calf.

Who will be next to join and receive all this assistance and instruction.

New Canning Club Organized

At a recent meeting held on July 9th, at the home of Frank Wangeman, East Jordan, "The Pep Canning Club" was organized with eight members from Eveline township. Miss Ruth Featherly, assistant State Club leader was present and outlined the work in detail and discussed questions pertaining to canning of fruits, vegetables, and jams and jellies. The girls under 14 in the first year's work will can at least 30 quarts, those over fourteen can 50 quarts. In the second year work in addition to fruits and vegetables the girls will can jams and jellies and larger quantities.

The club is planning on getting up a demonstration team to compete at the Gaylord Camp for the honor of being selected to go to the State fair at Detroit. It is hoped that the girls can all attend the Club Camp at Gaylord in August.

The following are the members and officers:

Katherine Wangeman, President.
Alice Russell, Vice-Presideat.
Alfrieda Reich, Secretary and Treasurer.

Members: Eula Arnott, Ellen Reich, Alice Stallard, Violet Ward, and Doris Russell.

All the girls live in the same community and have as their leader Miss Mildred Wangeman, who also led the club last year.

The Sunday services begin at 9:30 a. m. with the session of the Sunday school. Morning worship is at 10:30. The pastor will preach on "A Searching Supposition," "If the Salt have lost its savor."

Our young people will co-operate in the program and the pastor will give a brief address on "The Youth Movement in Our Own and Other Lands." Miss Larue Higman will tell something of the story of the recent Young People's Christian Endeavor convention.

The special hymn service has been postponed one week until July 18, at which time we shall have the assistance of Dr. David Hugh Jones as precentor for the singing of the program of hymns. Additional announcement of this attractive service plan will be made next week.

Thursday evening at 7:30 the church is open for prayer and reading and conversation in an informal midweek meeting for all who desire to come.

Attendance and interest in all departments is increasing and visitors are most heartily welcome.

LEARN SECRET OF HAY MAKING

LARGE ATTENDANCE AT RECENT DEMONSTRATION

Two Days All Time Necessary for Curing Process—New Machinery Was Used

The Hay Making Demonstration so widely announced was very favorably received by the large attendance of 175 people, who came from all sections of the county to see the "new" system of curing alfalfa.

By 1:00 the new hay making machinery donated by the Boyne City Marketing association for this special occaslon was set up and ready for business and the farmers anxious to see them work.

Larry Kurtz, Extension specialist from the M. S. C. and C. F. Skiver, Farm Crops Advisor for the Upper Peninsula had charge of the demonstration and explained the methods used in the new system. Instead of using a right hand rake, a left hand rake is used because it leaves between 70 per cent and 80 per cent of the leaf surfaee covered up, thereby allowing evaporation to take place normally as the leaves are not exposed to the hot sun, which wilts the leaves and as a result stops evaporation to a great extent. Upon examination, windrows left by the rake, were found to be loose, fluffy and open, which allows plenty of opportunity for the air to circulate, as compared to the trip rakes where windrows are wound tightly together, thereby hindering the curing process.. Also there was apparently a tunnel through the center of the windrows indicating how loose the left hand rake had left them.

One other big advantage of the rake was the manner in which it ran alongside of windrows and turned them half over, allowing the lower portion to be exposed and cured that much quicker, in ease of a rain or from weather conditions.

Then the hay loaders were hitched up and showed everyone present that they could handle the hay quickly and cleanly. Many farmers were agreeably surprised to see how clean they picked up the hay from the windrows and carried on the wagon.

The consensus of opinion was that any farmer handling 20 acres or more of alfalfa twice a year could not afford to be without this big labor saving equipment, which not only does away with the added labor of forking over hay two or three times, but also keeps the green color and decreases the chances of knocking off leaves, which are so valuable for feeding purposes.

Many farmers arrived with the opinion that it would be impossible to eure hay in the short time of two days, but upon seeing the proof they scratched their heads and finally admitted it was not only possible but absolutely the best way to cure hay and went home feeling as though the time was well spent.

BAPTIST CHURCH

The masterful way in which Charlevoix cares for its hundreds of resorters and tourists is the object of our great admiration. It is a great feat, and learned by years of experience. However, the host or hostess cannot be at church and entertain a houseful of guests at the same time. It has therefore been very gratifying to have so many bring their friends with them to the services thus honoring their Lord and His day. Perhnps this ean be done even more than it is now.

A large congregatlon at 10:30 a. m. and another at 7:30 p. m. will prove a blessing to all.

The Ladies' Aid is meeting today with Mrs. Bacon on Belvedere avenue with a large attendanee. They have the new rugs—made from the old carpet.

Mrs. Mary A. VanDusen

In loving memory of a dear one who departed this life two years ago today, July 15, 1924:

The Heavenly gates had opened,
A lovely voice said Come;
With a cheery smile and a wave of the hand
Mother has gone aeross the river,
To the shores of ever green.
How we long to see her dear face—
But that beautiful river flows between;
She is not dead—she is just away,
She has wandered into an unknown land.
If needs must be, since she lingers there.
Think of her fnring on, ns dear
In the lovo of there, as the love of here;
She is not dead—she is just away.

Some time, some day our eyes shnll see
The fnce we loved so well;
Some day her hand shall close in ours
And never say farewell.
The dny when we shall meet her
Grows nearer every hour,
Dearest Mother in Heaven
What a beautiful memory she left to those who loved her best.

CHAS. EMREY NOT A CANDIDATE

WILL ENTER REAL ESTATE AND INSURANCE BUSINESS

Has Served County Faithfully for Past Eight Years as Treasurer and Clerk

Charles H. Emrey, for the past eight years an efficient and faithful employe of Charlevoix county, has decided not to be a candidate for re-election for county clerk, and will become associated with the Pine Shores Realty Co., and Kinsey & Buys of Grand Rapids, and will manage their local office in this city.

With the ending of the present year, Mr. Emrey will have served eight years in the service of the county, four years as treasurer and four as clerk. During this time he has rendered efficient service and has formed a wide acquaintance among the people of this district, which should prove of great benefit to him in his new venture. In a letter to the Courier he explains his position as follows:

July 19th, 1926.

The Charlevoix Courier,
Charlevoix, Mich.

Dear Sirs: After due consideration of the matter, I have decided not to be a candidate for re-election for the office of county clerk.

Having been inside continuously caring for the offices of county treasurer and county clerk the past eight years, I feel that I should have a change and be outside more.

I shall be associated with the Pine Shores Realty Co. and Kinsey & Buys Co. of Grand Rapids in developing their resort lands on Lake Charlevoix and shall manage Kinsey & Buys Co. branch real estate and insurance office in Charlevoix, which is being opened this week in the K. of P. building on Bridge street. These companies own and intend to develop their two miles of water front on Lake Charlevoix and a crew of workmen have been on the premises the past ten days.

Spring Water Beach located two miles east of Horton Bay on the north side of Lake Charlevoix will be put on the market at once and many improvements are now being worked out to beautify this plat of ninety-nine lots.

I am surely greatly indebted to my many friends who have made it possible for me to enter politics and remain in the court house the past eight years and I assure these friends that I have attempted to conduct the offices under my supervision with justice to the patrons and to our county.

Respectfully,
Charles H. Emrey,
County Clerk.

Plant Small Mouth Bass

A consignment of over three hundred small mouth black bass, taken from pond nets near Mackinac Island, were planted in Adams' lake last Saturday afternoon by Deputy Game Warden Ed. Deuel of Boyne City. The bass run from 1½ to 3½ pounds in weight and had not spawned yet this season. Immediately after the planting signs were posted closing the lake to fishing for this year. There should be excellent fishing in Adams' lake when it is opened next season.

BODY TAKEN TO OLD HOME

CITY SADDENED BY DEATH OF MRS. R. F. SLOAN, SR.

Short Services Were Held Here Monday—Burial Made at Chattanooga, Tenn.

Death, which came last Sunday afternoon at 3:15, relieved the suffering of Mrs. Robert F. Sloan, Sr., who had been ill for a period extending over many months.

Katherine B. Guille was born at Zanesville, Ohio, December 27, 1870, and was 56 years old at the time of her death. She was married to Robert F. Sloan, Sr., at Chattanooga, Tennessee, June 25, 1894, and they made their home in Chattanooga and Memphis, Tennessee, until coming to Charlevoix in 1910. Four children were born to this union, two sons, Malcolm and Andros having died when children.

Besides her husband, Mrs. Sloan is survived by two sons, Robert F., Jr., and Paul; one grandchild, Mary Katherine Sloan; four brothers, Rev. George E. Guille, Athens, Tenn., Rev. B. F. Guille, Soutb Salem, Ohio, Charles R. Guille, Chattanoga, Tenn., and Harry L. Guille of Ooltewah, Tenn.

Short services were held at the family home on State street, Monday afternoon at 3:30, Rev. B. G. Mattson of the Congregational church officiating. A solo, "Good Night, Good Morning," was beautifully sung during the services by Mr. Frank Poole, accompanied by Mrs. A. J. Stelter. The body, accompanied by her husband and son, Paul, was taken to her old home in Chattanooga, Tuesday evening, where burial was made Wednesdny morning in Forest Hills cemetery beside her two sons who passed before her.

Mrs. Sloan was of a quiet and unassuming nature, which won her a host of true friends during her residence in Charlevoix. She was a consistent Christian, a loving wife and mother, and will be missed by a large circle of sorrowing friends to whom she had endeared herself by her loving ways. The bereaved family have the deepest sympathy of the entire community.

POTATOES AND BEANS DO WELL

THESE CROPS ARE COMING ALONG FINE

Michigan Ranks Third as Spud Producer with 65,000 Acres This Year

The outlook for bean and potato crops in Michigan is encouraging despite adverse weather conditions and some decrease in acreage, according to a report by Verne H. Church, United States agricultural statistician.

Michigan, ranking third among the potato-growing states this year, has an increase of more than two per cent or 12,000 acres planted over last year. The state's acreage is 65,000.

Minnesota ranks first this year in the potato group though its acreage dropped 8,000 this year. New York is second despite a decrease of 17,000 acres. Considering Michigan's increase, the drop in the three leading states is only 13,000 acres. Other states which show a decrease are Maine nnd Ohio. There wns an increase in potato acreage in Idaho, Washington, Oregon and Wisconsin.

Forecast of production based on July 1 conditions was 334,044,000 bushels, a gain of approximately 11,000,000 bushels over last year, though still under the nation's normal requirements. Favorable weather for the remainder of the season might bring the production up to normal, it is said.

Preliminnry estimate of the acreage of beans planted in Michigan set the figure at 614,000, which is the same as last year's acreage after the acreage not harvested last fall was deducted. All other bean growing acres report an increase except Idaho. Principal increnses are in Colorado, New Mexico nnd California.

INTENSIVE CLINIC FOR NORTHERN COUNTIES

Field Director Now Here Outlining Plan of Work

An intensive clinic program covering most of the counties of the northern section of the Lower Peninsula is being arranged for August by Miss Laura Bauch, director of clinics for the Michigan Tuberculosis association. Miss Bauch is already in the field making the preliminary arrangements. The examining physicians will be members of the staff of the Michigan Tuberculosis association, men who have made a specialty of tuberculosis. The clinics are financed by the Michigan Tuberculosis association through the sale of Christmas seals.

The clinics as planned will cover both the more sparsely populated counties and the more thickly populated counties, and will even include Beaver Island, located out in Lake Michigan and completely cut off from the mainland during many months of every winter. The clinics will be for diagnostic purposes only. In every case patients will be recommended for treatment to their own physicians. The special aims of the clinic are to discover tha early case that it may have the greater chance for recovery, and the later case not only that it may have a chance for recovery but also that it may learn how to protect others.

NET MEET HERE AUGUST 9 TO 14

MANY NOTED PLAYERS HAVE MADE ENTRIES

Five Courts at The Inn is Excellent Shape for Western Michigan Championships

Just a fortnight from next Monday the Western Michigan tennis championships will begin on the five splendid clay courts of The Inn and continue through the week, the official dates sanctioned by the United States lawn tennis association being August 9th to 14th inclusive. Events will include singles and doubles for men and women with mixed doubles a probability.

It is confidently expected that entries will greatly exceed 100 and tha handling of so large a number has been made possible through the generosity and foresight of Manager A. I. Creamer of The Inn who has added two clay courts to the battery of three. This work was begun last fall and has gone steadily forward under direction of C. Y. Marshall, who deserves much credit for the excellent condition of both old and new courts. The five courts with generous run-backs present one of tha most picturesque and inviting tennis settings to be found in the country.

Preliminary tournament work has been directed by Harold A. Cartier, tournament chairman, ably assisted by Lawrence Chase, secretary, with Archie Livingston, W. G. Parker and others assisting. Although now located near Detroit, Mr. Cartier is generously devoting his time and well directed efforts in behalf of his favorite sport and the success of tha first really big event over planned for his home city. The tournament last year was a decided success, and with favorable weather this year it is safe to predict a bigger and better event.

Advance entries include several nationally famous players. The list includes Lott, Hennessey, Hayes, O'Connell, last year's winner, and others. However, Mr. Cartier expects to add several others to this galaxy of stars.

Tournament announcements will be ready for distribution by Secretary Chase within a day or two. If you are interested in the grand game of tennis, or have acquaintances or friends who are, procure announcements and mail them out. Mr. Chase will cheerfully supply full information in regard to special accommodations for players, etc.

Tennis is steadily gaining well merited popularity throughout the world. Charlevoix is particularly fortunate in having some of the best courts in the middle west. The successful handling of this championship means much to our city. Tha local tennis fraternity ask only that the loyal support accorded last year be renewed and that as the matches approach the finals and grow in interest the attendance will be generous.

DOVE FROM TOWER TO SAVE 4-YEAR OLD GIRL

John Shilling Leaped from Lighthouse on North Pier

John Shilling, clerk at the Belvedere hotel, made a thrilling rescue Monday evening at about 7 o'clock, when he dove from the 80-foot steel tower on the north pier into the channel and saved a small child who had fallen into the water from the south pier from drowning.

Shilling, who had climbed the tower with no intentions of diving, was attracted by tha screams of the little four-year-old girl who had eluded her nurse and while playing on the pier had fallen in, dove without hesitation, swam to the girl and took her safely to shore. There was no one in sight at the time, and, considering Shilling's 80-foot dive from the tower, tha rescue was, indeed, a daring one.

"HOT oats and milk" is the dietetic urge of the day.

It's the "balanced ration" of protein, carbohydrates and vitamines—plus the "bulk" to make laxatives less often needed — that world's authorities are advising.

Now you cook it in 3 to 5 minutes. That's faster than plain toast. No kitchen muss or bother.

Why go on, then, with less nourishing breakfasts? Today get Quick Quaker . . . food that stands by you through the morning.

Why I'm going to the Greater MICHIGAN STATE FAIR

By Joe Bourquin

THE BIGGEST THRILL IN SOME TIME

In the first place, I'm always ready for a little change around about September. And I just jump into my flivver and point her for the State Fair Detroitway. Been doing it for 17 years and going to do it again this September. Last year I got the thrill of my life. The stunningest girl kept looking at me and I kept wondering who she was and where I'd seen her before. Finally she said: "Joe, don't you recognize me in this new dress I got down town at noon?" Doggonned if it weren't my wife!

PROGRESS OF THE GREATER MICHIGAN STATE FAIR

Construction work is progressing rapidly on the New Agricultural Building which will be completed in time for this year's Fair, Sept. 5th to 11th. It will be the finest structure of its kind in the country and devoted exclusively to the display of flowers, fruits and agricultural products

Michigan State Fair 1926

RACES WILL ATTRACT FROM GREAT DISTANCES

Twenty-four Entries for Auto Co. 2:20 Pace

The preparations for the North-Western Michigan great "Fair" at Traverse City are going on with renewed vigor. The fire which burned three of the buildings slowed up the progress for a time, making the premium list a trifle late, but since the board of supervisors have appropriated funds for a new building a new enthusiasm has taken hold of every one and things are moving forward with a bang.

The new building will replace the three which were burned and will give nearly 3,000 feet more space than the three buildings burned. It will be the most modern exposition building in Northern Michigan.

This great building will be 138 feet by 152 feet and modern in every respect. It will be ready in ample time for the fair.

One of the big features of this year's activities is the exceptional race programme. You ought to see Judge Pratt smile. What fair is offering any thing like the quality of attractions? Very few. Judge has a right to smile. When he counted up his entries for these $1,000 races he found that there were 24 entries for the Grand Traverse Auto Co.'s 2.20 pace, and 17 entries for the Merchants and Mechanics 2:19 trot.

This programme will call horse lovers for many miles. A fine new horse barn added to the very good equipment already in use will make for comfort to the horses and the men who care for them. And the new track which has been completed this spring is a real track.

"No-oo-o, it ain't likely. But if he ever stows it where ye can lay your hands on it or ye see him give it to anybody else you just remember as Long John stands your friend, gentlemen. Friend is the word, remember. And the old saw says a friend in need is a friend indeed."

Presently we rounded into the wind and came to, and Flint pulled under our lee, rowing slowly, with long, leisurely strokes like a man who is weary but intent upon finishing a difficult undertaking. Now that he was so close we could see that the scarf around his head was crusted with blood. His coat and shirt were torn to shreds, and his shoes and stockings gummed with mud.

A man heaved him a couple of lines, and he knotted them carefully to bow and stern before he began to climb the cleats of the side ladder, moving stiffly but with unerring precision. As his face lifted above the bulwarks the men nearest to him gasped and trod back upon the toes of those behind them. Such a face I had never seen. 'Twas not alone the terrible blue color and the congested veins that bulged redly under the skin, but a suggestion of experiences beyond the pale of ordinary human understanding. His eyes glared savagely. His mouth was fixed in a grimace of hatred. In his tanned cheeks were riven lines of fear, of anger, of revenge, of cupidity, of insensate ambition—aye, and of remorse.

He dropped to the deck and peered watchfully around him.

"Well, here I be," he croaked. "Ho, you Darby, fetch me a bottle o' rum. Yarely, lad!"

Darby skipped away on his errand, white-cheeked and shaking.

Nobody spoke, and Flint laughed—oh, dreadfully!

"Ye ain't glad to welcome your skipper back, eh? How'd ye make out, Bill?"

Bones had shouldered a path through the clustering ranks, but even he was speechless before Flint's ghastly figure.

"We—we—we're all right," he stuttered finally.

Silver, only, seemed unimpressed.

"Ye were seven as went ashore, cap'n," he said apologetically, "and one to return aboard."

Flint laughed that dreadful laugh a second time.

"Aye, there's six stayed ashore, Silver; six tall fellows. Six, says you, and seven's lucky. Aye, lucky! Main lucky! And Allardyce says he's safe wi' six! Ho, ho, ho!"

"Where—where—are they?" questioned Bones.

"Ashore, I told ye, Bill. All safe ashore."

"Dead?" pressed Bones.

"Aye, dead as Harry Morgan—or Avery."

Darby dived through the jam with an open bottle of rum, and Flint stretched out both arms and tossed men right and left to make way for the lad.

"Rum!" he exclaimed. "That's what I need. Rum—and plenty of it!"

He bent back his head, put the bottle to his lips and drank—and drank. You could hear the gurgle of it as it trickled down his gullet.

"Aaae-aah!" he breathed. "That was rare stuff. Get me another, Darby."

He tossed the bottle overboard, and started to sing a stave of that savage sea-song which was the chief delight of the crew:

"Tom Avery died of a cutlas slash—
Yo-ho-ho and a bottle o' rum!
Mounseer Tessin felt the gallays' lash—
Yo-ho-ho, and a bottle o' rum!

"But the treasure," spoke up Silver. "What'd ye do wi' it, cap'n?"

Flint eyes him for as long as 'twould take to count twenty. And I am bound to say Silver met his eye unflinchingly.

"Why 'tis safe, John," answered Flint in the horribly soft tones he had employed with Allardyce. "All tucked where it'll stay safe."

"Aye, but where?" persisted Silver.

Flint's blue, mottled visage became convulsed with a passion words cannot describe.

"Where?" he mouthed. "Aye, where? Ask on, man! Or seek it, if ye wish. Aye, go ashore. Lay off those ropes," he shouted to the men at the falls to which his gig was hitched. "There's a boat," he went on. "There's tools on the island. Ye can have food and rum. Go ashore if ye like, and stay—any o' ye! Search for the treasure till —— opens wide for ye. But as for the ship, she'll beat up for more, by thunder!"

He waited a moment, but no man accepted his challenge. Silver, indeed, stumped deliberately out of the crowd, with a faraway look in his eyes that were as bright and hard as a pair of polished buttons.

"That's well," said Flint. "The course is so'west by south, Bill. We're for the Dead Man's Chest. All sail, and a lookout in every top!"

CHAPTER XVIII

"Fetch Aft the Rum, Darby McGraw!"

Murray had predicted that the looting of the Santissima Trinidad would send the frigates to sea from Santo Domingo, St. Pierre, the Havana and Kingston, and the adventures of the Walrus furnished ample confirmation of his words. Six days' sail to the southward we raised the tops'ls of a lofty stranger whom the lookouts identified as a king's ship.

Flint, summoned from his perpetual debauch in the main cabin, agreed with them and ordered the helm put over. The Walrus headed west, and the stranger followed her. She clung to us through the day and night, and in the morning our 'glasses revealed the ominous belt of gunports of a sixty-gun razee. But like all English second-rates, she was clumsy in the water, and Flint was a good seaman, if nothing else. He contrived to keep beyond canonshot and during the second night shifted his course cleverly and gave our pursuer the slip.

For us three prisoners the Walrus was a floating hell. Moira might not stir from her stateroom unless it be at night when Flint occasionally slept and the most of the crew were carousing in the fo'c'sle; but she never complained of the confinement that washed the color from her cheeks, and retained her buoyant spirits despite the hideous danger which shadowed her every hour.

Without Darby she would have been in even worse case. 'Twas he spied out the moments she could venture abroad and thirst himself dauntlessly betwixt her and any threats. He carried her such food as she would eat and often did the same for us, for Flint was become subject to seizures of ungovernable ferocity, in the grip of which he distrusted all aboard the ship saving Bill Bones and Darby, and was in terror of unseen presences that lurked about the cabin's corners and glowered at him from the stern windows.

In these seizures he would take his pistols and shoot in every direction, regardless of who might be present, or with his dagger he would hack at the walls and pursue imaginary enemies along the companionway. But for Darby he would have slain Ben Gunn, and he did actually cut down one unfortunate fellow who goggled at him as he stamped out upon the deck, foaming and mouthing defiance to the ghosts that tormented him.

It was soon after this that the fever first appeared in our midst. I can still see the look, half-doubt, half-misgiving, in Silver's face as he heaved himself aft by one of the life-lines which grilled the main deck and hailed Flint on the poop.

"There's ten lads groanin' in their hammocks, cap'n."

"Take your crutch to 'em," snapped Flint.

"Them lads is sick," answered Silver. "Bellyaches and headaches a-twistin' 'em in knots."

"They're soldierin' so as not to have to go aloft," returned Flint. "But if you're afraid of 'em, I'm not."

The first of the sick men he prodded with his hanger already was dead, and he hastened back to the cabin and fortified himself anew with rum. I heard him mumbling to Bones as he entered the companionway:

"It's main queer, Bill. I don't like it. Maybe my luck ain't good against sickness."

"Maybe," answered Bones. "What be' your dons wi' the map?"

Flint's teeth gritted together.

"If I thought ye—"

"Belay there, John. I'm only thinkin' as if ye was sick some o' them swabs for'ard might try to come by it."

"Don't ye worry about that," advised Flint grimly. "It's safe—and it will stay safe."

A second man died the next day, and there were eighteen sick instead of ten. A panic possessed the crew, and Silver mustered a foc'sle council of frightened pirates, who whispered and nudged each other as they gazed awestruck at Flint's congealed visage atop of the barrel which was his official throne. Thorough scoundrels themselves, they accorded him the sincerest respect which was the due of one who utterly surpassed them in wickedness. He was "a rare 'un," "a main desperate rogue"; "lead and steel was same as bread and meat to him."

"What'll ye have?" he growled.

"Well, 'tis this way, cap'n," Silver broached diplomatically. "The crew feels as they never comes from the ship bein' foul and at sea so long—"

"We ain't been long at sea."

"Maybe not so long from the Rendyvoo, but we ain't careened or cleaned ship this year."

"Whose fault is that?"

"It ain't nobody's fault. But it do seem as if we'd onghter run into some likely port where we could get sweet water and greens and check the fever before it runs through the crew."

ALL BORROW AND NO PAY

We continue reducing the national debt; and we are again reducing national taxes. But extravngant borrowing continues to increase state, city and town debts and taxes. When they are short of money or need to finance a new project they float more bonds. Each project is worth the cost nnly if it gives hack fall value to the public. Every dollar of interest on any kind of a public bond is another dollar in taxes; and every dollar in taxes is another dollar that comes nut of the people in increased cost of living. The landlord who has to pay more taxes raises the rent on your house and on the store where you buy your fond. All the economy cannot be practiced by the housewife and the national government. Look nut for the waste between the home unit and the national unit. Make sure that you get value delivered in the new bridges, roads and streets and that no project is just an opportunity to sell bonds.

Our idea nf a wasted function is a speech of introdaction.

Apportionment of $15,367,191 in primary school moneys to various counties at the rate of $13.25 per child has been announced by the department of public instruction.

STREET FIGHT RESULTS IN STABBING

Colored Chauffeur Landed in Jail Last Saturday Morning

Hostilities resulting from remarks made by Livingston Smith, colored chauffeur for a resort family, to Roy Chamberlain and his lady companion, ended with Chamberlain being stabbed several times in the back and shoulders.

The affair happened last Saturday morning at about 1:30, on Bridge in front of Nell's Cafe. It is alleged that Chamberlain and his companion were sitting in a car when Smith accosted them. The fight followed with Chamberlain being stabbed. Smith was arrested by Deputy Charles Marshall and taken to the county jail. He was released the following day under $1,000 bond, furnished by his employer.

SAILING CANOE ON TRIP TO CHEBOYGAN

Summer Resorter Lone Passenger on Inland Route Trip

Augustine Canfield, a summer resorter from near Manistee, made the harbor here Monday in a small cnnoe equipped with sails, in which he is making the trip from Manistee to Petoskey, through the inland passage to Cheboygan and from there to Mackinac Island.

Mr. Canfield left here shortly after his arrival for Petaskey, and from the manner in which he handled his tricky little craft, he will complete his journey without mishap. A canoe is n hard craft to manage under normal conditions, let alone sailing, and considering the fact he is making the trip alone, it is deserving of mention.

HORSES! HORSES! AT FAIR GROUNDS IN TRAINING GRIND

Between 130 and 150 horses are now at the Michigan State Fair Grounds at Detroit training for the Grand Circuit races and the other light harness races which will he held at cnunty and state fairs throughout the Middle West this summer and fall.

First arrivals at the stables in Detroit were at the grounds by May 1 and within three weeks more than fifty horses were in daily training. Of the 130 horses approximately half are trotters and pacers and the nther half are saddle horses in training for the horse show.

A number of horse shows and fairs have already been held in Ohio and Indiana, and many nf the animals which were being conditioned at the Michigan State Fair track have left their stables for shnrt pnriods in order tn compete in these shows and fairs.

Because this past spring has been quite hackwnrd, no fast time has been recnrded for any of the hnrses at the track, hut by the middle nf July real speed will be nn tap. By thn npening of the State Fair on September 5, the horses which are to enter thn varioas events at the Michigan Statn Fair will be at their peak form.

SHOW RING BEING BUILT AT STATE FAIR RACE TRACK

SHAPTON'S SELL TO CREAMER AND FLYNN

Beautiful Knollwood to be Sub-divided and Improved

Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Shapton have sold to Mr. Andrew I. Creamer and Mr. William E. Flynn the farm and buildings called Knollwood adjoining the Belvedere Country Club. The transfer of this property does not mean that Mr. and Mrs. Shapton will leave Charlevoix, but instead they have agreed to take charge of it. Mr. Creamer and Mr. Flynn purchased the property for the reason that they have always enjoyed Knollwood and have in mind promoting it. At the beginning of another season lots will be offered to eastern friends, and it is probable that in a year or two there will be a hotel erected.

There is no location in Charlevoix superior to Knollwood. The property now is estimated to have about seventy-five acres, and the price paid was close to $10,000.00. This will permit lots of an acre or more to be sold at a reasonable price.

The Shaptons and the purchasers have always been warm friends, and it was only with the understanding that Mr. Shapton would look after the upkeep of the property that it was purchased.

ROAD BIG AS-SET TO COUNTY

ADDS THOUSANDS TO PRESENT VALUATION

A Concrete Road Around Pine Lake Will Still Further Advance Interests of County

"Uncle" Geo. H. VanPelt, in a follow-up article, covers some points he thinks he did not make plain in his recent address to the county board of supervisors. He is still urging the the building of a concrete road around Pine Lake, which he believes will make Charlevoix county the most attractive resort and agricultural district in the United States. His letter follows:

In reading my first letter which I wrote June 30, 1926, to our board of supervisors in Charlevoix county, I am inclined to think that I did not make my self quite so clear on the subject as I had intended. The Thirteen Million Dollar Concern as the assets of Charlevoix county is all OK because that is an honest valuation of the county which no one will deny.

Referring to the county board of supervisors of ten or a dozen years ago, who voted to allow the tax payers of our county to vote for bonding for the sum of $350,000, they did a very wise thing, but not so wise when they took it upon themselves to build the road. That was a great and serious mistake, for none of them knew anything about building concrete roads; and neither did the men they engaged to build it know as much about it as they do today. They also allowed the building of this road to drag along for which I blame our business men, till prices had so advanced that they were almost prohibitive.

However, the material in this road to Petoskey was, and still is good, as was proven by my sending a piece of a curve which had been laid wrong to the Lewis Institute for a test of its strength. The report came back that it was good and stood a pressure of 4,000 pounds to the square inch. This road was so strong that it could not be broken with heavy sledges, and they had to resort to the use of dynamite in tearing it out. This quited the false reports which had been circulated regarding the quality of the material being used in building this road.

We must all admit, however, that we made a great mistake when we built the six miles of road from the Emmet-Charlevoix county line to Greensky hill. At that time we were quite early in the concrete road business, we knew absolutely nothing about it. That was why I said in my address to the board of supervisors that the business of a Thirteen Million Concern should be conducted in the same manner as that of a private corporation, for profit and not for loss. But even at that, we have an actual valuation of $350,000; and inasmuch as it is true that the older concrete grows the better it is, no one knows, no one can tell how long concrete roads will last for as yet none have worn out. A concrete road may be broken by over loading just as a bridge would break.

The best talk I ever heard on good concrete roads was given by an old farmer at one of our Illinois State Highway meetings. It was at Danville, Illinois, the home of our great United States Senator, Uncle Joe Cannon. The old German was asked to speak, but he asked to be excused, and said:

"I did not come here to speak—I came here to listen and learn."

Then the president of our meeting, Wm. G. Edens, who knows more about roads and farm lands than any man I ever met, asked the German:

"Do you not own 320 acres in section —— on —— road?"

"Yes, sir."

"When did you buy it?"

"Twenty-two years ago."

"How much did you pay for it?"

"Fifty dollars an acre."

"How much can you sell it for now?"

"Oh," and the German raised his voice and said, "Three hundred and fifty dollars an acre."

"What is the cause of this great advance in the price of your farm land?"

"Oh, sir, Mr. President, I have a good concrete road within one mile of my house. Now I can hitch up my team, put on a load, as much as the team can haul to the concrete road, unhitch the team, walk back to the house, put another load on another wagon, haul it to the concrete road, put this load on the wagon with the first load, and go on to town. Sometimes I take three or four loads, put them all in one and go to town. Oh, the concrete roads they make all us farmers rich. Yes, Mr. President, we all like these concrete roads—we would like to pay for them; but you were too smart for us. You built all these roads with your sixty million dollar bonds and you make the automobile owner pay it all. But I speckt some day you will bond for more money and build more roads."

And so we did—100 miles. And now Governor Small wants another 100 miles. He says every road a good road—a good concrete road—and then there will be no more repairs, except for fixing shoulders, cutting weeds, setting out trees, etc.

I am also reminded of what Bill Wiles said when the concrete road was finished to the south:

"Now boys, pick up your tools, go back to your farm, and go to work in earnest for there will never be another day's work to be done on this road. It's too bad that it can't be finished to the Antrim county line, but it will show the difference between a concrete road that is a road and a lot of loose gravel out of which we try to make a road, but as yet have never succeeded."

A concrete road around Pine Lake, 20 feet wide, with the grading already done, should be built in one year, and should not exceed $20,000 a mile, as the state has already taken over the road from Charlevoix to Greensky hill.

This drive itself will do more to the advantage of Charlevoix county than any other one thing, and it will also bring thousands of settlers, who have millions of dollars and the value of our property and our land will so advance that our taxes will be lessened instead of increased.

A continuous record of successful accomplishments of good concrete roads backs the statements that concrete roads are here to stay. We have seen dirt roads give way to gravel, gravel to black top soft stuff, and the latter to concrete; but we have never discovered anything to take the place of concrete.

Plans have been definitely arranged for the Antrim-Charlevoix Jersey Breeders Annual Picnic to be held at Ellsworth on Saturday, July 24th, at the Camp Grounds.

H. E. Dennison, fieldman from the American Jersey Cattle Club will be the main speaker of the day. The Ellsworth Co-operative association have kindly donated lemonade to add to the well filled lunch baskets.

Another big feature of the day will be the exhibit of Jersey cattle from the herds of our best Jersey breeders, and don't forget there are some fine Jerseys in these two counties and some that are real producers.

H. E. Dennison will act as judge and ribbons will be awarded to the winners in their respective classes. Much of the credit for the big day must be given to the small, thriving village of Ellsworth for their generosity in donating the ribbons and also in taking care of the transportation of the Jersey cattle to and from the picnic grounds.

If you own Jersey cattle or are interested in Jerseys you can not afford to miss this big day. Mr. Dennison will show you the correct type to get in Jerseys and how to select your best cows. See for yourselves the kind of Jerseys these two counties have. Bring your well filled lunch basket and plan to spend the day at Ellsworth on Saturday, July 24th.

Most any sweet young thing knows a good place for a moonlight picnic.

HINKLEY OUT FOR STATE SENATE

ANNOUNCEMENT MADE BY PETOSKEY MANUFACTURER

Three Times Representative of Emmet County and Held Committee Appointmeots

Dana H. Hinckley, local manufacturer and president of the Petoskey News printing company, Tuesday announced his candidacy for the republican nomination for state senator from the 29th distriet, which comprises the counties of Charlevoix, Cheboygan, Alpena, Montmorency, Otsego, Presque Isle and Emmet.

The Hinkley eandidacy comes after consultations with counties outside of the two having avowed eandidates, Cheboygan with C. A. Campbell as eandidate, and Charlevoix with H. E. Dicken in the race.

With seven counties in the district, Hinkley's friends point out that the past four years the senatorship was placed in Charlevoix county in the person of William J. Pearson. The four years prior to that Cheboygan caunty held the toga in Herbert F. Baker.

A strong movement was made to recognize Presque Isle county and to have Rudolph Dueltgen of Rogers City annbunce his candidacy, Mr. Dueltgen being one of the respected and successful men of that district. Mr. Dueltgen, declined to become a eandidate this year. He and a number of his friends are supporting the Hinkley eandidacy on the grounds that it is only good political judgment to recognize other counties in the district besides the two above named whieh have held the senatorship for the past eight years.

Hinkley is not without legislative experience, having represented Emmet county in the state legislature three terms, and was twice chairman of the important ways and means committee.

While at the state capitol, very few bills bore Hinkley's name, as his principal attention was confined to assisting in holding down state appropriations and helping in killing off the flood of freak and unnecessary bills that sometimes mark the legislative sessions.—Petoskey Evening News.

Mr. Hinkley's entrance into the senatorial race puts an entirely different aspect on the situation. Located as he is, in about the center of the district, he will have a strong following from every part of the seven counties. If previous legislative experience is to be counted as an asset, Mr. Hinkley is by far the best qualified man in the race. We believe Charlevoix county will recognize his qualifications and he will receive a majority vote from this section.

INDIAN PICNIC AUGUST 4 AND 5

PROGRAM FEATURES TRIBAL DANCES AND CEREMONIES

Revival of Former Cross Village Picnic to Be Annual Affair in Future

On August 4 nnd 5 the Ottawa Indians of Northern Michigan are to hold a picnic in Charlevoix. It will be an event of considerable interest not merely because it has historical significance, but also because it will throw a light on some humanities of a racial contact.

On the bills with which friends of the celebration are advertising it, there are notices of the dances and ceremonies which we associate with Indians of school-book histories. There will be war dances and costume dances—evidences of the persistent barbaric traditions that civilization has been unable to efface. We have all seen more or less of these ceremonies through the medium of the circuses, rodeos and wild west shows; but it will be interesting to observe how the technique has been preserved by people who are anything but "show" Indians.

Of greater interest will be the Indian christening and the giving of Indian names to any whites who desire. These rites have never been commercialized as have the dances; and it is doubtful if they ever will be for they are of a more intimate nature. They will afford play to the aboriginal imagination so well known in American nomenclature—they are tribal ceremonies belonging to the Indians of history—the priests, warriors and medicine men. The program also includes a good list of Indian orators, exponents of an ancient tribal custom.

In contrast, there will be features taught by the whites; and some of them, notably the closing prayer and the singing of the Star Spangled Banner will indicate to white observers how much of the gentling gloss of civilization has been taken on by the tribesmen turned citizens.

The picnic is a revival of the old annual Cross Village picnic carried on under the leadership of the old Chief Shomin. The old chief's decendents are prominent among the workers for the present picnic, for the bills bear the names Chief Shomin of Petoskey, and Wm. Shomin of Charlevoix, as chairman and speaker, respectively; and these men are grandsons of the old leader. For many years the Cross Village event was of great importance to whites and Indians here in the north; and this revival by sons and grandsons of the old sponsors is the beginning of an annual continuance: That Northern Michigan attaches importance to it is evidenced by the bidding of several towns for the honor of next year's picnic. Where this will occur is to be settled by a business meeting during the picnic, when there will also be formed an Indian society or lodge.

The roster of speakers includes speakers from all the northern towns and settlements where there are Ottawa colonies of any appreciable number. These men are respected citizens, nnd discharge their responsibilities as such with credit, they do their work in civilized communities quietly and competently. They build their homes and vote for their government. One prominent member of the tribe, Dan Maksawba, is well known throughout the middle west and southern states as a great favorite of the thousands of Charlevoix's summer visitors whom he serves so intelligently as a city mail carrier. He has a flawless record of fifteen years' service. Very fittingly, this young chief lives at the foot of Mount Maksawba, named for the proud old chief, his grandfather, of the same name.

Included under the head, "Indian Speakers from Different Towns," is Dr. John Reycraft of Petoskey. He is somewhat of a figure in celebrations of the kind because he can deliver an address in a dialect that passes with the uninitiated for Indian and pleases the good doctor, himself, immensely. Hero, perhaps, is the source of the universal opinion that Dr. Reycraft is a good Indian.

FREE CHEST CLINIC FOR BEAVER ISLAND

Held in Charge of Michigan Tuberculosis Association

A free chest clinic which has been especially arranged to give the people living on Beaver Island an opportunity to have a thorough chest examination by a tuberculosis specialist and to have such an examination without any expense to themselves is announced to be held in the Parish Hall on the Island on the afternoon of Monday, August 16, and the forenoon of Tuesday, August 17. The expenses of the clinic are borne by the Michigan Tuberculosis Association through the sale of the tuberculosis Christmas seals.

Miss Laura Bauch, director of clinics for the Michigan Tuberculosis association, has practically completed the arrangements for the clinic on the Island. She is especially anxious that all persons who have lived in contact with a case of tuberculosis come to the clinic for examination, for it is from contact with the disease that it is most frequently acquired, she states. She urges that any person who has a cough that has hung on for many weeks, or who has suddenly lost weight, who is exhausted without any apparent reason or who runs a fever in the afternoon, come to the clinic for examination.

LOCALS TAKE MANCELONA INTO CAMP

Ninth Inning Rally Gave Them 3 to 2 Victory

Charlevoix copped nnother victory last Sunday by taking Mancelona into camp in a close game by the score of 3 to 2. The game was played at the north side ball park and was the snappiest of the series so far.

Batteries for Charlevoix were See nnd Pumphrey. See pitched an excellent game of ball, striking out 18 Mancelona batters, and was strongly supported by the rest of the team. Hal Shields and John Knight were outstanding stars for the locals in the field. Shields won the game for the home team when he hit a two-bagger with two on bases, nosing Mancelon out of their 2 to 1 lead. SERIES BEGINS NEXT SUNDAY

FIVE SUNDAY PROGRAM AT CONG. CHURCH

Rev. Dr. David Hugh Jones of Evanston, Ill., Will Occupy Pulpit Next Sunday

The First Congregational church takes pleasure in announcing to its members and attendants nnd to the general public including especially all interested summer residents and visitors that arrangements have been made for a series of morning sermons by distinguished preachers for the five Sunday mornings of August.

The series will begin next Sunday morning with a sermon by the Rev. Doctor David Hugh Jones, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Evanston, Ill. Many will remember the thrilling sermon delivered by him at the opening of the series last summer and will engerly anticipate the inspiration of hearing him again. Dr. Jones has endeared himself to a wide circle by his many years of summer residence among us.

Other preachers expected to follow in the series are Rev. Carl Glover of the First Congregational church of Red Oak, Iowa, and Dr. Selby Vance of Pittsburgh, Pa. Announcement of the remaining appointments for the last two Sundays in the month will be made later, but it is expected that the capacity of our modest church will be taxed at all these services to hear these messengers of the gospel, who so generously give out of their vacation time the inspiration of a series of great religious messages.

The Sunday evening service for August 1 at 7:30 will be conducted by the ladies of the church with a program of special interest concerning the achievements of women in the field of missions. The special offering of the evening will be for the benefit of the Michigan building of Kobe college for girls in Japan.

The Sundny school meets at 9:30, and the Ironton church and Suaday school meets at 2:30.

The evening service of last Sunday was very well attended and the program of great hymns sung under the leadership of Dr. Jones with brief comments by Dr. Mattson introductory to each hymn was deeply enjoyed by all.

ROBBERS ENTERED THE TROY LAUNDRY

Took Around $60 from Cash Register After Closing Hour

Robbers who entered the Troy laundry last Friday evening, took about $60 in cash from the cash register.

The robbery was committed some time between seven and eight o'clock after the place had closed during the supper hour. A considerable sum of money had been removed by Manager Sorensen before closing or the loss might have been larger. Mr. Sorensen states that upon his return to the laundry, he noticed a large touring car hurriedly leave in front of the place, but had no idea they had been inside until he entered the building. He believes he could identify the party upon seeing them again, but so far no clues to their whereabouts have been obtained.

DEATH CALLS MRS. FINUCAN

HAD BEEN IN FAILING HEALTH FOR PAST YEAR

Community Saddened by Passing of Friend and Neighbor—Loved By All

Mrs. Mary Finucan, wife of the late Capt. Wm. Finucan, for many years captain of the steamer Manitou, died at her home on Grant street last Thursday afternoon at 1:30, death being due to heart trouble. Mrs. Finucan had been in failing health for the past year and her death was anticipated by immediate members of her family, who, with the exception of Irene and Stanley, were present at the time of her death.

Mrs. Finucan, whose maiden name was Mary Whyte, was born in Merrickville, Ontario, June 23, 1864, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Whyte, and was 62 years old at the time of her death. Her early life was spent at Merrickville, where at the age of 20 she was married to William Finucan. The couple came to Michigan 35 years ago, residing in Manistee one year before coming to this city, where they had since made their home. To this union were born four sons, William, Jr., and George of Grand Rapids; Stanley of Lansing, and Richard of Northville; also five daughters, Mary, Irene and Eleanor, who survive, and Claire and Helen now deceased. There are also two sisters, Mrs. Fred Sperl and Miss Julia Whyte, both of Herkimer, N. Y.

Funeral services were held Monday morning of this week at 9:30 from the St. Mary's church, interment in the Catholic cemetery. Her four sons, William, Jr., George, Stanley and Richard and James Gaskin, Sr., and L. P. Adams acted as pall bearers.

Mrs. Finucan was a life-long member of the Catholic church. She was a consistent christian, a loving wife and mother, and will be missed by a large circle of sorrowing friends, to whom she had endeared herself by her loving ways. Beautiful floral offerings were but mute testimony of the high esteem in which she was held, nnd the church was crowded with friends who came to pay their last respects to their departed friend and neighbor. The bereaved family have the deepest sympathy of the entire community.

ANNIVERSARY SALE OF HARDWARE COMPANY

Big Slash in Furniture and Hardware Starts Thursday

The Charlevoix Hardware Company, in commemoration of its 55th anniversary, has now under way the largest sale of Hardware, Furniture, Housefurnishings and Electrical Goods ever staged in this section.

The sale starts Thursday morning and lasts for ten days. The big selling event will attract customers from all sections and without doubt the sale of merchandise will run far into the thousands.

Large double page posters have been distributed over territory for fifty miles around, and the prices quoted are such that anyone in need of furniture, hardware or electrical goods, will make unusual savings if they purchase their needs during this sale.

Liberal discounts are offered on every article in the big store and in some instances the prices quoted are the lowest ever offered the buying public. If you are in need of anything carried in this finely equipped store, now is the time to buy. Make it a point to read the offerings in the big posters and newspaper advertisements. The savings are so apparent that one can see them at a glance.

TRI-COUNTY PICNIC AUGUST 4TH

TO BE HELD AT WHITING COUNTY PARK

Dairymen of Aotrim, Emmet aod Charlevoix Counties Co-operating on Big Event

The biggest dairy picnic ever held in Charlevoix county will take place on Wednesday, August 4th, at the Whiting County Park, two miles west of Advance on the south side of Pine lake.

We are pleased to announce that Professor O. E. Reed, head of the Dairy Husbandry department of our State University, will be our guest and will address the gathering of dairymen. This alone should warrant your presence, as Prof. Reed is one of the foremost dairy authorities of the country and has been selected to judge at some of the best shows held.

It is hoped that all members of cow-testing associations will be present, as this meeting will be of special interest to those in their dairy problems.

A big program is being arranged that will be of educational and recreational value. A judging contest will be held for all dairymen. Come on you judgers and see whether you can place the ring of cows properly. Prizes will be given to those selected as champions. In addition to Prof. Reed other speakers will appear on the program from the three counties.

The following is the program:

12:00—Basket lunch at noon. Lemonade will be furnished free by Charlevoix county.

INTREPID WINS MACKINAC RACE

COMMITTEE GIVES HER VICTORY BY TEN SECONDS

Sloop Rascal First Detroit to Island Boat to Cross Line—No Records Are Broken

The sloop Intrepid, owned by the Brosseau—Hough Prather syndicate, and sailed by Donald F. Prather, well known in northern summer resort circles, carried the colors of the Chicago Yacht club to victory Tuesday in the Chicago to Mackinac Island race by the narrow margin of ten seconds, corrected time. She defeated the Milwaukee Yacht club entry, Dorello, with Captain O. L. Dwight, as master.

The Dorello captured the elapsed time honors, being first across the finish line with a lead of forty-eight minutes thirty-five seconds ahead of the Intrepid, just ten seconds too slow to give her the victory in the 331-mile racing classic.

The Cherry Circle sloop Celeritas, owned by the Chicago Athletic association and mastered by Captain Julian Armstrong, had a comfortable lead during the first two hundred miles. However, she lost out during the light going which prevailed Monday, and finished third.

The yawl Freya was next to finish. The Freya nosed the schooner Elizabeth at the finish and wins the yawl class prize as well as third honors in corrected time. She is owned by Benjamin Carpenter, Jr., who also is her captain. The Elizabeth appears to be the winner of the schooner class as neither the Privateer nor the Alena, to which she must give time, were in sight at 10:30 o'clock Tuesday.

The R class sloop Rascal, owned by Dr. A. F. Jennings of Detroit, but captained by Ted Anderson, was the only yacht to finish in the Bay View Yacht Club annual 261 miles Port Huron to Mackinac Island race up to 10:30 o'clock Tuesday morning. This race started at the same time as the Chicago to Mackinac event and is a companion race, drawing main support and interest from Lake Huron. yachtmen.

The Rascal got the gun of the Island finish line at 2:26:30 o'clock Tuesday morning. Inasmuch as this race is a class contest and the Rascal had no competition in her class as a Marconi rigged boat, Detroit officials here are anxiously awaiting the arrivals of the schooners and yawls in which classes real interest in the race centers. When last reported off Harbor Beach the two-sparred yawl Mindora, owned by H. H. Harris of the Detroit Yacht club and the schooner Picaroon, of the Bay View Yacht club, were bending their divisions with the Rascal close in shore. Near them, also was the cruising sloop Urchin, owned by Captain Alger Sheldon, of the Detroit Boat club.

The following is the summary of the three first in Chicago race boats, giving the craft name, then the time of finish, the elapsed time on the route nnd the corrected time after her handicap is figured.

Intrepid finished at 2:47:35 p. m.; elapsed time 58 hours, 37 minutes, 35 seconds; corrected time 55 hours, 36 minutes and 5 seconds.

Dorello finished at 1:59 a. m.; elapsed time 57 hours, 49 minutes; corrected time 55 hours, 36 minutes, 15 seconds.

Celeritas finished at 6:12 a. m.; elapsed time 62 hours, 2 minutes and 55 seconds; corrected time 61 hours, 33 minutes and 25 seconds.

The record for the race in corrected time is 28 hours, 31 minutes, and 51 seconds, made by the sloop Mavourneen, owned by E. M. Mills, and established in 1911. The elapsed time record is held by the schooner Amorita, owned by Dr. W. L. Baum and made in the same race, 31 hours, 11 minutes and 30 seconds.

We have just received word that the Mackinac Island-Charlevoix race has been called off for the reason that so few boats had completed the Chicago-Mackinac run in time to start. Boats finishing the race however, will be in Charlevoix for the Pine Lake regatta, Friday.

In Memoriam

In loving memory of our dear Janie, who was called away three years ago today, July 29, 1923:

Softly the stars are shining
Over the silent grave,
Gently she is sleeping
One whom we loved but could not save.
None can know how much we miss her
Through the weary, lonesome hours.
In our hearts there is no question
That God picks the sweetest flowers.

YOUNG LAD DROWNS AT BEAVER ISLAND

Became Frightened When Swimming Raft Drifts Away From Shore

St. James, Beaver Island, summer colony, was saddened Wednesday evening of last week when Hugh Robert McLaughlin, ten-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh A. McLaughlin, of Detroit, was drowned while bathing in the harbor. The lad had been playing on a swimming raft and when the float broke away from its moorings and started drifting out into the hnrbor he became frightened and leaped overboard.

The body was recovered within a short time but medical assistance was of no avail in restoring the spark of life. The drowning is reported to have occurred at about 4:30 o'clock.

The grief-stricken parents and a party of friends took the body to Petoskey aboard a tug. It was prepared for shipment and taken to Detroit aboard the late night Pennsylvanla lines train. Mr. McLaughlin is a former resident of Northern Michigan.

NEW SIGN ON M-11 IS A WORK OF ART

Some people don't believe in "signs"—but we know a fellow who does, and he doesn't only believe in them, but he makes them. The new sign of the Kinsey & Buys Real Estate Co., recently completed and erected by the Leo. Powers Sign Co., of this city on the Charlevox-Petoskey rond is a masterpiece in sign work.

If you haven't seen it, go out and look it over. The work is a realistic production of Lake Charlevoix's beautiful wooded shores and sandy beaches. Its advertising value is indicated in the many words of praise given out by pnssing tourists and those who have seen it. Signs of this kind help greatly in developing the tourists' interest in our many attractions.

"There's a many ports we could make," commanted Flint sarcastically.

"We could ailns hand np for the island," interposed a man.

"So's you could go for to dig up the treasure we just stowed away," snorted Flint. "Not if I know it!"

"There ain't been talk o' the island," said Silver hastily. "But what would ye say to the Bermoothas?"

"Too many reafs to pile onrselves on—Hamilton is a port o' call for the king's ships."

"Them's the very words I said myself!" exclaimed Silver. "And what would ye say to Savannah, cap'n, which same is a quiet spot and has no garrison, seein' as Georgy is the newest o' all the colonies in Ameriky?"

Flint reached down to the deck beside him and liftad a bottle of rum to his month, going through the usual performance of draining it at one colossal gulp to the considerable admiration of the crew.

"Aaa-aah," he muttered, wiping his lips with the back of his hand. "Savannah, eh? That might do. But mind ye, men, I'll ha' no talk o' dishandment thare or elsewhere. We'll stop by to clean up the favar and wntar, and when that's done we'll square off south and collect what's comin' to us on the Dead Man's Chest. I'm a man o' my word!"

Silver made quick assent.

"Fairly put. And the while we're lying off Savannah the frigates will be a-wearin' themselves out on false scents. It works both ways, cap'n."

"It'll work my way," rapped Flint.

He slid off the barrel, balanced dizzily for a moment and walked into the companionway under the poop.

"Darby McGraw!" he cnlled harshly. "Ho, Darby, fetch aft the rum."

That night he had another of his fits, declaring that Andrew Murray was come aboard to slay him. He chased Bones from the cabin, hanger in hand, and was for setting upon the watch on deck when Darby restrained him with a bottle of rum, asserting it to contain Murray's heart's blood. Flint tossed it off with howls of infernal glee and retired to snore on the cabin floor, twitching and foaming at the mouth in his slumber like one possessed. The next day as we rolled in the oily swell under a torrid sun with the pitch pricking up in bubbles from the seams, the fever laid its hot hand upon him.

He babbled childishly of his luck.

"Ye wouldn't break my luck, God! Oh, Ye wouldn't! There never was none like John Flint to rove the seas.

John Flint as outwitted old Murray and was the end of him."

The droning voice would ramble on day and night, with intervals of exhausted sleep, punctuated by awful, explosive screams:

"Ho, Darby! Darby McGraw! Fetch aft tha rum, Darby!"

And again:

"I'm a-burnin' in my guts, Darby. Ye wouldn't leave me to burn. Fetch me a noggin o' rum!"

Other times he would sing, and always the one song that had been my introduction to his company:

Bellamy's hangin' all dried and brown—
Yo-ho-ho, and a bottle o' rum!
A-rattlin' his chains by Kingston town—
Yo-ho-ho, and a bottle o' rum!

But words cannot describe the horrors of the week which succeeded. For five days men died at the rate of three a day. Then the disease seemed to diminish in virulence, and although we had as many as seventy sick at once, practically all survived. As a rule, men who were stricken either perished within twenty-four hours or else made a slow recovery. Flint was one of the few exceptions, and I can only suppose that in his case the illness resolved itself into a battle betwixt a naturally sinewy frame and the weaknesses developed by the strong liquors with which it had been saturated.

That we three and Darby were untouched I attribute as much as anything to the measures which Peter took. He brewed a drastic purgative of rum, molasses and gunpowder, and he was insistent that Darby should procure a large earthen crock to contain boiled water which we kept in Moira's stateroom. Bones, Silver, Pew and those others of the crew who escaped the infection did so simply because of their physical vigor, or perhaps because they were so accustomed to living in filth that the exaggerated conditions aboard the Walrus might not harm them.

A week from the day we steered westward we sighted the mouth of a broad river, crossed a bar at high tide and bore upstream between low, sandy shores overgrown with pine forests. On the verge of evening we rounded a point of land and dropped our anchor opposite a little log-built town perched on a sandy bluff.

Peter and I had seized the opportunity of the semidarkness to escort Moira to the rail for a view of our new surroundings, and we were staring hungrily at this outpost of civilization when the thud-thud of Silver's crutch sounded on the deck behind us.

"Ye might think from them goin's-on ashore as there was a mighty treasure in Savannah," he observed; "but bless ye, there ain't enough worth the takin' in that town to pay for the gunpowder to blow down the stockade."

I assented, and Flint's voice came faintly through the twilight:

Fifteen men on the Dead Man's Chest—
Yo-ho-ho, and a—

"Ho, Darby! Darby McGraw! Fetch aft the rum, Darby McGraw!"

"He's main bad, Flint is."

Silver thrust a thumb over his shoulder.

"Won't hardly last till mornin', Bill says."

"Oh, poor soul!" exclaimed Moira. "And him with so much wickedness to answer for! I am thinking he will have a great need of prayers, so if you will be after taking me below, Bob—"

Flint called out suddenly in a frenzy of fear:

"Bill! Where's Bill Bones? Stand afore me, Bill. There's them here I can't face."

The guttural mutter of Bones' voice answered the plea. Silver cocked his head on one side, hand cupped to ear, listening eagerly. But the words were impossible to distinguish.

"No, no, not yet, Bill," wailed Flint. "I ain't a-goin' to die. Where's Darby? Hare, lad, you come and sit by me. You're my luck, Darby. I can't die with you by me."

Bones spoke again, and with an oath Silver cuddled his crutch in his armpit and hopped over the deck to the companionway.

"We better go," said Peter. "Ja, we take der little gal to her room, Bob. I don't like this."

Silver reached the door of Flint's stateroom as we stepped inside the companionway. We could see him distinctly in the light of the fading sunset glow which came through the stern-windows. Ben Gunn was crouching by the door, with his back toward us, hugging his arms about himself and evidently eavesdropping upon what went on in the stateroom. As we watched, Silver swung his right arm and dealt Gunn a blow which knocked him head over heels into the main cabin. The steward emitted one agonized howl and scuttled under the cabin table. Silver wrenched open the state-room door and poked his head inside.

"Well, well, if this ain't a touchin' picter!" he remarked. "Bill, I see you're doin' the kind and dootiful by our lamented skipper. But anybody as knowed ye would expect it of ye. Is that the treasure-map?"

"What are ye goin' to do about it?" snarled Bones by way of answer.

Silver backed into the companionway, as if in mute obedience to a levsled weapon.

"Do?" he repeated. "That depends, Bill. We'll see what the crew has to say."

"Aye, that we will," retorted Bones, and his voice vibrated with undisguised triumph. "Who's to come a'ter ye, cap'n?" he added.

"I ain't goin' to die, Bill," came Flint's mournful wail. "Where's the rum, Darby? I'm a-burnin' wi' thirst."

"Who's to come a'tar ye, John?" pressed Bones remorselessly.

Silver indulged in a mocking laugh.

"Aye, he knows what to answar!"

And Flint echoed him gaspingly:

"Bill's mate. He—has—map."

"Satisfied?" jeered Bones.

"I be, Bill," Silver assured him. "But we'll put it to the crew first, all fair and reg'lar. And whatever they say, Bill, you remember I'll be watchin' ye. Don't try any tricks wi' that map. I'm ready for ye, and if ye start tricks we'll put the Black Spot on ye."

"To —— wi' you and your macs Spot!" roared Bones. "Get out o' here afore I take my knife to ye."

Silver stumped toward us, his face distorted with rage.

"He has it," he rasped. "—— him for the shifty scoundrel he is! Well, the next move is for ye to plot, Master Ormerod."

"I see it not," I said coldly.

"Wait till he thinks o' the maid here," rapped the one-legged man and hopped out on deck.

From Flint's stateroom Darby's voice rose in protest.

"Take your hand off me, ye— Ah, if he wants the rum do be lettin' him have it! Sure, what will it matther—"

"'Tain't no use wastin' good rum on a dead man," said Bones, chuckling thickly.

There was a gurgle of liquor, and Flint moaned:

"Where's my rum? Fetch aft the rum, Darby McGraw!"

"Ah, ye black-hearted wretch!" shrilled Darby. "May the banshees whistle for ye, and— I'll not! Beware do ye touch me, I say, or I'll—"

The door of the stateroom crashed open again, and Darby was bundled out into the companionway.

"'Tis bad luck, and not good, I'll wish on ye!" he screamed.

Bones' ugly face was projected from the doorway long enough to squirt a stream of tobacco-juice at the boy.

"Be Off With Ye, Ye Red-Haired Rat," He Growled.

what will he the use of it all? For there will be nothing but just the fires of hell to punish one that's as bad as you."

He turned wearily and saw me, and the tears trickled down his freckled cheeks.

"Oh, Master Bob, I douht mo the cap'n dead or close to it, and Bones he—he—drove me forth, for—for fear I'd spy on him, says he—and him wi' the treasure-map he hianhandered from Flint in his weakness! By the Rock o' Cashel, I'm finished wi' pirates. They're a poor lot. Leave us go home."

"If we only could, Darby!" I said.

He dashed a grimy paw across his eyes and gave me one of his shrewd looks.

"Troth, Master Bob, I'm thinkin' we're none of us like to live else," he answered.

CHAPTER XIX

Cap'n Bill Bones

Clump-clump-clump went the heavy sea-hoots up and down the echoing length of the companionway, and the mutter of voices beat an accompaniment to them.

"Aye, there he lies."

"—me, was there ever such a mug?"

"Ah, but ye'd oughter ha' seen him afore Long J to his eyes!"

"'Tain't right to put pennies to John Flint's eyes, him as handled onzas like other fellers does fardin's."

"Are ye daft, mate? Ye'd never put gold in a dead man's shroud!"

"Mebbe not! Mebbo not! Not to be sewed up, no."

"Ah, what's t matter? He's dead. The river'll have him—"

The clumping became a measured tramp as four tall seamen carried out the canvas cylinder that had been John Flint. A bubble of grief from Darby broke the silence.

"Glory be to God, and him gone overside in all his sin! Och, St. Bridget and St. Patrick and Blessed Veronica and Holy Mark, do ye intercede for him? Let ye cry upon the Virgin to be speakin' for him in the heavenly courts. Oh, wirra, wirra, wirra, evil he was, and good in his way, and there's none by to give him the chauce of purgatory!"

A roar from Boues.

"Stow that guff! Here, a pair o' ya strangle the mick if he'll not hush."

Darby whimpered and was still.

"Down-stream," continued Bones. "here, to la'b'd. Ease him up. Whera's that shot? Is it fast? Let him go, mates!"

A splash.

"And now who'll say as Bill Bones is not cap'n o' the Walrus?" demanded Boues, gruffly menacing.

Peter touched my srm, pushing open Moira's door very gently.

"Ys'll not be leaving me?" she breatbed.

"Nsen," ha denied. "But we bettar hear what thay do."

Bones was talking again as we stole into the desarted companionway. He sat on the barrel whicb Flint had been nsed to occupy. A battis lsnthorn hung over his head, and tha pals yallow light showed him to bs nigh as drunk as his dead commsndar.

"—and to —— wi' luck! He was a good pal, Flint was; but ha thought too mucb o' luck. I'm a seaman, I am. Give ma sun and stars, and I'll steer ye a course. Give me sigbt o' tops'ls, and I'll fetch ye 'longside o' a prize. I'm no man for fuss, I'm not. Ye can ha' all the rum ye want, so be ye sail tbe ship sad fight her.

"Now, wbat ha' ye to say? Speak up, any o' you swahs as is for trouble!"

Long John Sliver spoke from the shadows, his words flowing smoothly with an insinuating, oily inflaction.

"We hetter make it all rag'lar, Bill. You're mats, and you say as how Flint give yon the treasure-map and says you was to be cap'n a'ter him; but reg'lars reg'lar, and it don't do no harm to—"

Bones pulled a stiff, crackling sbeet of map-paper from his bresst, and waved it in the air.

"Here's the map," he declared. "Long John there was a'tsr it, but Flint give it to me, as he says."

"Sure I says it, Bill," proceaded Silver, undisturbed. "But what I says, ton, is as we'd oughter have a 'lection as the Articles provide."

A murmur of assent greeted thia declaration. Bones scowled.

"'Tain't necessary," he returned. "I'm mate, and I'm the only real navigator ye got. But go ahead and 'lect whoever ye please—only remember I got the treasure-map."

"Yes, you got the treasure-map, Bill," agreed Silver, and his voice somehow becsme more hateful than ever. "But we don't allow as it's yours, ye know. You're what the lawyer shsrks calls a trustee. You keeps it for the rest o' us, and we—" he chuckled venomously—"why, we keeps our eyes on you, Bill."

Bones swore.

"Get on wi' the 'lection," he adjured the crew. "Who's to be cap'n? Speak up and name some one!"

A dozen sycophants shouted "Bones," with a vim which inspired him with sweating vanity, and several called out: "Silver!" and "Long John!"

"Anybody else?" challenged Bones.

Nobody answered.

"Well, Long John," he leered, "it seems like 'twas you 'n' me. The Articles says them what votes for one feller goes to one side, and them what votes for t'other goes opposite. So, seein' as you're on the la'b'd side, I'll say them as votes for you goes la'h'd and them as votes for me goes sta'b'd."

"Suits me," grunted Silver.

There was a subdued rustling and patter of feet as the men divided, and the lanthornlight revealed two unequal groups on either side of the mizzen with Bones sitting on his barrel between them. Probably three-fifths of the crew had voted for him.

"Well, Long John," he said without trying to repress the triumph in his tones, "d'ye want to tell over the vote?"

"No," replied Silver briefly. "You win."

Boaes rubbed his hands gleefully.

"Ah, I win, do I?"

"I said yea."

The opposing factions regarded each other like packs of wolves preparing to dispute the carcass of a fresh-killed moose. I suspected for an instant that they would fight, but I misjudged Silver's self-control. Galled he might be, but he did not permit the sting to his pride to influence his policy.

"You win, Bill," he repeated, "and I'm the first to wish ye joy o' it. And seein' as you're dooly elected, s'poae yon tell us what your plans sre for the ship?"

"Plans?" answered Bones warily. "What plans might ya mean?"

"Are ya for liftin' tha treasure on tha two islands or beatin' up for more?"

Bones reflected. He was not nearly so clever as Silver, and I imagine he knew it. He feared a trap, bnt study as be might be could not detect any pitfall behind tha innocent question.

"I'll be guided by the crew," he announced triumphantly. "You're gentlemen adventurers, all o' ye. Nams your wishes!"

This time the crew looked instinctively to Sliver for a lead.

"We got plenty o' treasure in them ishand caches," he said tentatively. "Speakin' for myself, I'm for collectin' what we got, takin' three or four ships and dividin' up for different countries, accordin' to what men seek. There's enough wallin' for our spades to make us all comf'table for life, and them lads as wants to go on the Account agsin can easy do it. Turn over the Wairns to 'em if ey faucy it. I don't care. But soma o us ha' had enough o' the sea, and we'll try our ease ashore."

A shout of approval capped this speech. There was not a man but was lured by the prospect of thousands of pounds to spend on the right side of the gallows. And like all sailors after a series of hard voyages, they never wanted to see a ship again—or sn they thought.

Bones was as enthusiastic for Silver's plan as any.

"Aye, aye," he applauded. "Long John has the right idea. We'll water tomorrow, and then we'll try for the Dead Man's Chest."

And he began to shout drunkenly the song that Flint had died singing:

"Fifteen men on the Dead Man's Chest—
Yo-ho-ho, and a bottle o' rum!
Drink and the devil had done for the Chest—
Yo-ho-ho, and a bottle o' rum!"

Other men joined in, and as if by magic pannikins of rum appeared. Bones drank several whilst we watched.

"You drink wi' me, bullies!" he hallad his supporters. "An easy skipper is Bill Bones. Rum for all, and to —— wi' discipline!"

They howled joyfully over this, and what I had expected to provide a free fight seemed nbout to develop intn nothing worse than such an orgy of intoxication as occurred almost every night aboard the Walrus. But it did not suit Silver's plans to have all restraint cast off at that point. He stumped forward into the circle of lanthorn light, with Pew, Black Dog, Darby and a dozen others at bis back.

"Belay, mates," he cried. "We got a vast task to settle here. Time tn carouse afterward."

"There's no time for drinkin' like the time ye ha' the liquor at your elbow," retorted Bones.

"And them's true words," assented Silver heartily. "And 'tis plain to be seen as you're a skipper the lads'll all be blithe for, Bill. But I was just figgerin' as we uone o' us has ever asked the pris'ners how long 'twill take to dig up that treasure o' Murray's. So I makes bold to suggest we have 'em up here and put 'em through their paces. 'Tain't no ways right as pris'ners should be as close-mouthed as Flint let 'em be. He was a good messmate, Flint was, but I allus thought them swabs pulled the wool a mite over his eyes, blow me if I didn't."

I could see Bones slowly run his tongue over his lips, blinking his eyes the while. He liked this idea. So did the crew. They were in the humor for baiting whoever were at their mercy.

"Have 'em out," ruled Bones. "Long John's right."

"Aye, have 'em out," yelled the crew. "Make 'em dance!"

Silver's hard, polished-agate eyes glinted around the circle of savage faces and came to rest upon Bones' sodden visage.

"Run aft, Darby, there's the sweet lad," he said, "and bring us the pris'ners."

"Not—not—her!" answered Darby haltingly.

"Yes, her," replied Silver with a slight emphasis.

And one of his hands reached out, and his strong fingers tweaked the Irish boy's ear. Darby yelped.

"O' course, you bring her," Silver continued. "Why's she too good to tell us what she knows, mates? Just because she had Andrew Murray's favor, I wonder!"

"Not—"

Darby started to protest again, but Silver cut him off with a word that dripped chill ferocity.

"Skip!"

"Fetch up the wench, boy," growled Bones, "or I'll give ye a taste n' Murray's triangles."

"Fetch her up!" howled the crew in rabid chorus. "Let's ha' a look at the wench!"

Darby started toward us with the tears running down his cheeks. We could see him picking his way slowly through the crowd. A man kicked him as we watched. Poor Darby! He had been Flint's favorite, and there are always men in any crew to hate the captain's pet.

I looked at Peter, and he met my gaze with dumb foreboding.

"We might take to the water," I said.

Moira spoke behind us.

"Yon will do no such thing," she answered. "Nor will I. We are not yet in such evil case."

"You don't know—"

"They would surely overtake us," she argued. "No, no, Bob; we must wait and pick a better time if we can."

"Ja," approved Peter. "Dot's right. I t'ink—"

He hesitated.

"Silver will be nursing some hidden plan," supplemented Moira.

"Ja," he said. "How didt yon know?"

"I guessed," she said. "Glory, I will have been listening behind ye this quarter-glass, for I had a feeling in me there was new wickedness astir. But here's Darby, and for his sake we'd best be going quickly."

Darby fronted us with a gulp.

"Silver bade me—"

Moira slipped between Peter and me and dropped her hand on his shoulder.

"Don't ye be taking heed to what they say," she comforted him. "Faith, 'tis you are the grand knight, Darby lad, and I am that proud o' ye I could be giving ye a bit of a kerchief or gaudy ribbon to wear in your hat—only that ye will have no hat and me neither ribbon nor kerchief! But let's be after trying what the rogues want with us."

And out she marched at the boy's side before one or the other of us could step ahead.

The ranks of pirates parted to admit our procession, and we threaded the shadows to the edge of the central pool of light where Silver leaned upon his crutch. He moved aside to make room for us, and I found myself at his right hand. Perhaps fifteen feet away Bones sat on his barrel, his coarse face flushed and shiny, his cruel eyes devouring Moira's lissome grace. The scores of others were just so many vague blurs to me, but Moira frowned about her with a kind of high pride that turned the boldest stare. Peter looked stolidly over the heads of the throng. It was his way when he fronted danger; behind their mask of fat his little eyes were darting daggerwise from face to face, probing, guessing, estimating.

Silver spoke first.

"Well, here they be, Bill."

Bones' tongue traveled the circle of his lips twice before he replied; he did not once take his gaze from Moira.

"A proper wench, ain't ye?" he fawned.

"Do ye tell me so!" she exclaimed.

And the pirates screeched with laughter.

"Lusty, ye are," sneered Bones. "Ye need tamin', and I bn' n hankerin' to take ye in hand."

"'Twould take ten of your like," retorted Moira, nose in air.

Silver interposed in the midst of a second burst of laughter. I had to admire the scoundrel's deftness. He contrived to appear to be coming to the rescue of Bones in such a way as to rouse all the man's resentment against the cause of the implied humiliation.

"Sure, mistress," said Long John very respectfully, "what the cap'n would know is how long it should take to shift the treasure Cap'n Murray had ye bury on the Dead Man's Chest?"

Moira's nose remained in air.

"If ye were not afraid of the hard work it would maybe take ye as much as the half of a watch," she answered.

He addressed me with equal respect, requiring confirmation of what she had said. I gave it, as did Peter.

BAD FIRE AT CHIC-CHIC POULTRY FARM

Chicken Coop and Dressing Room Completely Destroyed

Fire which presumably started from an oil stove in the dressing room at the Chic-Chic Poultry Farm on State street, Tuesday morning at about 11 o'clock, completely destroyed the chicken coop nnd equipment contained in the building. Mr. Jeffery states thut his loss will run somewhere around six hundred dollars.

Mr. Jeffery was making deliveries at the time of the fire and no one was in the building. The fire department answered the alnrm promptly, but found the structure a mnss of flames when they arrived, and considernhle work was required to keep ndjoining buildings from burning also. Re-building was started at once and there will be no interruption in business. Insurance was carried on the building. The loss will be keenly felt by the owner at this time as the structure wus only a month old and a model of perfection, for the purpose for which it was used.

MADAM ARDENIA, MIND READER, IN SPECIAL COACH

Madam Ardenia, the muster mind which will be the feature attraction at the Majestic Theatre Wednesday evening, July 28, along with showing of the "Wagon Trail" in which Tom Mix is at his best, arrived this morning with entire entourage. Madam Ardenia travels in a $10,000 Auto. Pullman, which is her home on wheels and which is equipped with every modern convenience. This palatial automobile will be on display in front of the Majestic theatre this afternoon and tonight.

Madam Ardenia's work consists of mind-reading. She will call a name in the audience and the person whose name is called will indicate his presence by raising his hand, then if the question is personal she will word her answer so that only the interested party will understand and recognize what she is talking about.

A Roumanian by birth, Madame Ardenia has traveled in all foreign countries—and is now on her fifth American tour.

Nervous, rundown women, suffering from worry or overwork, need Vinol. It enriches the blood, improves the digestion and rebuilds the whole system. Women love the taste of this pleasant Cod Liver and Iron tonic without oil. Has stood the test of a quarter century. F. J. Fessenden, Druggist.

MUMFORD URGES MORE EFFICIENCY

NOT MORE PRODUCTION BUT BETTER LIVING

Three Hundred Delegates Consider Taxes, Roads, County Schools and Rural Churches

"Greater efficiency in agriculture, not to produce more crops and thus aggravate the surplus problem, but to give time for participation in community movements and for individual and group development, must be part of the new rural program," declared Dr. Eben Mumford, Professor of sociology of Michigan State College, nddressing 300 Farm Bureau leaders who met at the College in East Lansing, July 20-21.

The purpose of this two-day conference was to discuss some of the perplexing problems confronting rural communities nnd to set up the machinery whereby members of this organization may bring their combined power to the solution of these problems.

Four questions of outstanding importance received the major portion of the attention of the delegntes. These were: Tnxntion, side roads, the rural school and the country church.

Speaking on the side road problem, Prof. C. R. Allen of the M. S. C. Civil Engineering department, pointed out that there are 60,000 miles of township roads in Michigan as compared with 6,700 miles of state roads and 13,000 miles of county roads. Much of the $13,000,000 a year which is expended on these township roads is said to be wasted, due to the inexperience of the township highway commissioners. Prof. Allen told of what the college is doing to remedy this condition and of what the organized farmers could do to help save tax money and still secure better side roads.

Other speakers at the conference included: M. B. McPherson of Lowell, president of the Michigan State Farm Bureau; C. L. Brody, secretary-manager of that organization; Prof. E. E. Gallup, supervisor of Smith-Hughes agricultural teachers; Lucius E. Wilson, president of the Generni Organization company of Chicago; W. W., Billings of Davison, president of the Genesee County Farm Bureau; E. P. Reynolds of Olivet, president of the Eaton County Farm Bureau; S. D. McNitt of Ravenna, president of the Muskegon County Farm Bureau; W. P. Harper, vice-president of the Barry County Farm Bureau; nnd Dr. Malcomb H. Dana of New York City, director of the department of rurnl social work for the Congregational Extension Board.

At the closing session of the two-day conference resolutions were passed providing for the appointment of four state Farm Bureau committees to consider the four big questions which had been considered, namely, the township roads, taxation, rurnl schools and the country church. Each committee will study its problem, make a survey of the situation and then arrange for a state-wide conference of Fnrm Bureau members for the consideration of that particular matter.

Another resolution provided for a committee of three men and two women in each township to deal with all local Farm Bureau matters and to co-operate with the four state committees referred to above.

BARBERRY SPECIAL TOURED THE COUNTY

Party Making Tour to Locate Infected Territory

Charlevoix county was visited last Friday and Saturday by a party of officials from the United States Department of Agriculture. The party is making a tour through the Upper Peninsula and the northern part of the Lower Peninsula and came to Charlevoix to collect some first hand information in regard to the common barberry bush under Michigan conditions. At the present time a vigorous campaign is being conducted here against the bush by their department in co-operation with the State Department of Agriculture and Michigan State College.

The common barberry is the cause of black stem rust on wheat, oats, barley, rye and other grains and grasses.

The party consisted of Dr. C. R. Ball, head of Office of Cereal Crops and Diseases; Dr. H. B. Humphrey, head of rust investigational work throughout the entire United States; Lynn Hutton, Statistician for Office of Cereal Crops and Diseases; W. F. Reddy, in charge of Barberry Eradication Campaign in this state.

BAPTIST CHURCH

Jesus did not say "The field is Charlevoix," but He did say "The field is the world." When making our contribution we should provide for our own and give soma thought to that which is beyond and have a care for the world.

Candidates come, and candidates go, but the city, county and state go on. Hence the reminder that every elector should study and keep in touch with the various candidates as they present themselves, and be able to indorse the best qualified ones at the coming primaries in September.

We believe the state snd church should be forever separate and each recognize its responsibility to and for the other. The church's part is to develop the highest type of citizen, morally and intellectually. The fact that so large a msjority of our prominent citizens are sctive in church life persuades us that the church is doing much to develop such a people.

Services Sunday at 10:30 a. m. and at 7:30 p. m. ara open to all and a cordial invitation is extended to all both resident and resorter.

Bible school meets at noon, and the mid-week service is held on Wednesday st 7:30 p. m.

It is expected that our pulpit will be occupied by some of the clergymen who are spending the summer in this vicinity.

WEST MICHIGAN TENNIS MEET DRAWING LARGE ENTRY

Last Year's Winners Entered—Many Players from Grand Rapids and Detroit

An excellent array of talent is expected to compete in the Western Michigan tennis championships which open on The Inn clay courts next Monday, August 9. This event has been played at the Kent Country Club, Grand Rapids, for many years past and was transferred to Charlevoix this year under the auspices of the Charlevoix Tennis Club and the Western Michigan Tennis association.

The local tennis club entered the sanctioned tournament field last summer, putting an an excellent invitation meet which drew many players of high ranking. The last year's winners, George O'Connell in the singles and O'Connell and Frank T. O'Brien, both of Chicago, are entered for the tournament next week. They are both bound to meet stiff opposition this year and will find plenty of difficulty in defending their titles.

The state of Michigan will be well represented at the coming tournament and this fact will add more than ordinary interest inasmuch as it is a state meet. Detroit already is certain of being represented by F. C. Elwell, Francis Tait and Al Devine. Clare Schwegler of Midland, ranking player of the Eastern Michigan Tennis association, has entered and Mrs. Ruth Riese of Saginaw, Michigan woman champion, is certain of competing. Early entries from Chicago include, besides O'Connell and O'Brien, Jack Chappell and Ellis Klingeman, all of them capable tournament performers.

Perhaps the largest delegation of players will enter from Grand Rapids, the few who played in the Charlevoix meet last summer having broadcast the pleasures offered there both off and on the courts. Dr. W. H. Thwaites, city champion is entered. Ted Joslyn will aid in running the meet, being the official referee. Paul Dunakin, Ed. Peterson, Jake Steketee and at least a dozen others, including Arthur Kusterer, W. E. Raiguel, Earle S. Irwin and son, Bill, are planning to make the tourney.

Another sure entry from Grand Rapids is Enoch Judkins who the past spring was No. 4 man on the University of Wisconsin team.

H. A. Cartier, tournament chairman, has appointed a complete list of officials to assist in running the meet. W. Gordon Parker, tenth national ranking player in 1895 or 1896 and still playing a strong game, will serve as clerk of courts. Lawrence R. Chase is tournament secretary and to him at Charlevoix entries can be mailed, early entries being appreciated. The entries will close Sunday evening, drawing will be made Monday morning and play will start early Monday afternoon.

Archie L. Livingston has been named tournament treasurer and C. Y. Marshall heads the grounds committee. In addition an Association of Commerce committee and a general committee have been appointed, thereby assuring the co-operation of both Charlevoix business men and resorters in putting on a successful tournament. Prominent on the general committee is A. I. Creamer, manager of the Inn, who is giving much toward aiding the tennis leaders.

HOSPITAL TAG DAY SET FOR AUGUST 14th

The annual Tag Drive for the benefit of the Charlevoix Hospital will take place on Saturday, August 14.

This is an annual event put on for the purpose of raising funds to carry on hospital work. It will be well to remember that few hospitals other than those conducted as private enterprises, do the volume of business necessary to pay running expenses.

This is true with the Charlevoix Hospital. During the years 1924-25, receipts were enough to pay 80 per cent of running expenses. Receipts from July 1925 to June 30, 1926 will cover about 75 per cent of running expenses. The deficit must be raised from other sources if the hospital continues to do business.

The hospital trustees will conduct the annual membership drive this year and ask our year round residents and summer people to donate as liberally as they can. Also when you are asked to buy a tag on Tag Day, don't slip the boy or girl selling the tags a dime or a quarter—dig down and give in a substantial way.

ANNUAL MEETING AT WHITING PARK

W. C. T. U. of County Have Planned a Fine Program

All members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union are invited to attend the annual county meeting to be held at Whiting Park next Friday afternoon and evening, beginning at one o'clock standard time.

A song service, devotions, annual reports, election of officers and other business, a short program of papers and talks, a social hour, a potluck supper at five o'clock and an address at the tables by Rev. J. B. Pentling of Boyne City, will be the order of the meeting.

Visitors will be welcome and husbands of members are especially invited for supper and the address following. Hot coffee will he furnished. Each person to bring their own dishes, silver, etc., as well as a few sandwiches and their potluck contribution to the supper.

In case of inclement weather the meeting will be held in the Boyne City M. E. church.

GOVERNOR GAVE ADDRESS FRIDAY

REFUTED CHARGES AGAINST PRESENT ADMINISTRATION

Governor Declared State's Financial Affairs Open to Public at all Times—No Secret

A crowd of about 500 people, led by the city band, gave Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck a rousing welcome upon his arrival here last Friday morning. The governor addressed himself largely to the discussion of state affairs and the financial management employed during the five and one-half years of his administration.

He pointed out that his opponents have conducted a campaign based on criticism without any constructive methods of bettering present day conditions. He sharply assailed the newspapers of the state for alleged falsities printed in their columns about the financial condition of the state's road budget, state institutions, etc. He declared that the state's financial records were open to public inspection at all times and that it was his desire to tell the public about these conditions himself and not through the press.

In his discussion relative to the position of governor, he stated: "The Governor's position is no snap. It has many pleasant things also many unpleasant things, along with lots of trouble and grief. I am not here for any personal reason, and have not asked the people to vote for me unless they feel that I have the ability to hold the office. When I entered this office I knew that I had to fight the old politicians, and the same men who were fighting me then, are now. I knew the work necessary to redeem the state's highway work and credit; but every move I have tried to make since 1921 has been blocked. Now the problems have been solved and I can go on with the new work."

He made it very plain that if the new work was to be carried on, or whether the state's affairs should go back as they were in 1921, is entirely up to the public. He also spoke of the state's accounting system which has proved one of the most efficient of any state in the Union. It shows a complete record of every cent that is handled, and a complete report of every state project can be given monthly. He said: "Our state has handled millions of dollars in the past 5½ years and no chance for any graft, which has been reported, could be true."

Lieut. Gov. Welch gave a short address, giving the assembly an idea what the people down at the capital think of the Governor and what he has been doing for the state, and the abuse he has taken to put through the few bills which have put our state's efficiency on a much higher plane than any of the others.

The speakers were introduced by Sen. Wm. J. Pearson of Boyne Falls.

NEW BOAT CLUB NOW ORGANIZED

OFFICERS ELECTED THURSDAY EVENING

Plans Now Under Way for First Regatta Under Auspices of Newly Formed Club

The first meeting of the Charlevoix Boat Club was held in the council rooms last Thursday evening with a fairly good attendance. Work of organization was completed and the following officers elected for the ensuing year:

Commodore, George A. Shwab, Nashville, Tenn.

Vice Commodore, John W. Keiler, Paducah, Ky.

First rear commodore, John R. Wineman, Chicago.

Second rear commodore, Walter Pritz, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Treasurer, Robert Bridge, Charlevoix.

Secretary, Mrs. Maude E. Brady, Charlevoix.

It was decided that the club should at once join the Mississippi Valley Power Boat association, in order that Charlevoix might invite that organization to hold its annual regatta here some time in the future.

Plans were also discussed for a regatta to be held here on Sunday, August 15, and probably one on the the following Sunday also. John R. Wineman donated a beautiful silver cup to be used as the prize in one race and Mrs. Brady, in behalf of the Brady Boat Company, a cup to be used as a prize in the outboard motor race. It is also possible that the Johnson Motor company will donate another cup for the outboard races. The regatta committee was authorized to procure suitable cups and prizes for the rest of the races. The regatta committee are now busy at work completing plans for the regatta.

There are numerous speed boats in Charlevoix this summer, including three Chris-Craft boats and several Dodge watercars, and many others and the races should draw a large entry and result in keen competition. It is not definitely decided yet whether the boats will be classed according to horse power or miles per hour basis, but at any rate the classifications will be suitable to all entered. Invitations will be sent to boat owners at Walloon Lake, Burt Lake, Elk Lake, Torch Lake and Harbor Point, and many entries are expected from out of town.

The design of a pennant for the club was decided upon at the meeting, to be a pointed blue burgee, with a red diamond upon which will be the club monogram in white, a large letter C enclosing the smaller B and C.

CAMP MEETING TO BEGIN AUGUST 6

Evangelist from Ohio to Be Principal Speaker

The annual camp meeting of the Church of God will be held at their camp grounds south of the city, beginning Friday evening, August 6th, and continuing through the 16th.

R. A. Whalling, an evangelist from Ohio, will be in charge of the meetings and he will be assisted by pastors from the northern Michigan field of the Church of God. Meals and lodging facilities are to be had on the grounds and those in charge expect the most successful camp meeting in years.

ANN ARBOR TRIO AT BEACH HOTEL

ENTERTAIN FOR BENEFIT OF CHARLEVOIX HOSPITAL

Evening Gives Promise of Being Most Delightful Entertainment Given Here for Years

One of the outstanding features of entertainments at the Charlevoix Beach Hotel this season is a concert that will be given in the Casino, which will be rendered by the Detroit Symphony Orchestra Trio composed of Fred H. Lewis, pianist, Ora Larthard, violin cello, and Madam Ida Divinoff, violinist and accompanied by Mrs. Harvey Simons, sololst.

Mr. Lewis, pinnist, is well known to Charlevox music lovers, having played with trios here during the past several seasons. He made a reputation very much worth while when he was named as an accompanist for Mr. Abbas.

Miss Larthard, celloist, is universally known for an unusually lovely toned quality.

Miss Ida Divinoff is an American girl of Russian parentage, having studied under Kubelik and many other celebrities. Her appearances in concerts in Vienna, Munich, Dresden, Leipzig, Hamburg and other foreign cities were a marked success and after returning to America she toured with John McCormack, Mme. Frances Alda and others of international reputation. Madam Divinoff is favored with the unusual talent with which the Russian people are so often gifted and her execution from a technical standpoint is extraordinary. Madam Divinoff is one of the few women violinists who can be ranked with the great violinists.

Mrs. Simons is well known, having toured the country both in concert and vaudeville on the Keith Circuits and the unusual range of her voice and quality of tones has caused many music lovers a delightful evening. Her appearances with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra and other organizations throughout the country have drawn down many tributes of the press. Her interpretation is one of true feeling and always a perfect distinction and exquisite charm. The following is the program which will be rendered Friday evening, August 13th, at 8:15 p. m.:

1. Sonata for Piano and Cello. Richard Strauss. Fred Lewis and Ora Larthard.

2. By the Waters of Minnetonka. Lieurance. From the Land of the Sky Blue Water, Cadman. At Dawning, Cadman. Electra Von Dolcke Simons.

3. Nocturne in E Flat. Chopin. Gavotte, Bach-Kreisler. Zigeunerweisen, Sarasate. Ida Divinoff.

4. Aria from Tosca. Puecini. "Vissi D'Arte, Vissi D'Armore. Electra Von Dolcke Simons.

5. Trio—Alumblatt, Wagner.

Tickets will be on sale at the desk of the Charlevoix Beach Hotel and elsewhere August 5th, and admission will be $1.00. The proceeds will be given to the Charlevoix Hospital.

The evening promises of being one of the most delightful entertainments given in Charlevoix in several years.

Allie Moore is here with a seaworthy sailing craft and will teach swimming, rowing, paddling and sailing, on Pine Lake daily. Give your boy a change and a real treat for the remainder of the summer on board ship. Special rates at $7.00 per week. Can be interviewed at Hamilton's boat yard.—Adv. 31t1

KEILER HAS NEW MATHEWS CRUISER

Boat to Be Called Miss Kentucky with Paducah as Home Port

One of the many fine boats in the harbor is the new cruiser belonging to Leo Keiler of Paducah, Ky., which arrived here Monday afternoon from Detroit. Roy Brady piloted the boat here and Mr. Keiler and his wife and mother made the trip with him.

The new 38-foot Mathews cruiser is exceptionally beamy, being 11 feet in width. She is staunchly constructed with planking of solid mahogany, and is fitted throughout for salt or fresh water. Two small sails are carried to steady the boat in a heavy blow and she will stand the roughest of weather.

There are sleeping accommodations for four people in the cabin and the roomy rear cockpit will take care of as many more. The boat is equipped with toilet in the bow and the galley is a model of perfection, an acetyline gas range, ice box, and plenty of cupboard and pantry room being a few of the many fine features.

The boat is equipped with a 100 h. p. Kermath engine, has electric light and electrical control and everything modern in motor boat equipment. Every inch of space on the boat is utilized to some useful purpose. Mr. Keiler expects to leave the latter part of this week on a cruise to Georgian Bay.

CONCERT-SERMON GREATLY ENJOYED

Proves Popular Method of Sunday Evening Worship

A large congregation enjoyed the unusually interesting and profitable evening at the Methodist Episcopal church last Sunday evening. It was a combination service of musical concert and sermon.

The Hull family of Detroit, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Hull, and their accomplished daughters, Alice and Benita, played several choice musical numbers as a prelude to the sermon. One selection in particular, a saxophone duet by the Misses Alice and Benita, was especially pleasing.

The pastor's sermon subject was, "The Adequate Appeal of the Gospel." He maintained that the Christian message demonstrated its adequacy to compass human need because it presented a mystic appeal, a social appeal, a partnership appeal and a conscience appeal. His text was, "The spirit and the bride say, 'Come.' And he that heareth, let

WHY NOT PLAN FOR THE FUTURE

BY ADOPTING A COMPREHENSIVE BUILDING PLAN?

The Safe and Sound Thing for Charlevoix to Do and Thus Avoid Costly Errors

If you were to lay out an extensive estate with buildings properly built and located, drives and walks where they should be, your first step would be to engage the services of a landscape artist who "knew his goods." When the work was completed it would be right. And at the same time, if you were planning for future development, you also have these in your original plans.

This form of planning ahead applies to cities as well as private estates. Few cities today are without a complete outline of future development. Plans are made for a development and expansion that may not mature in years. Yet, when it does come, its general detail is the same as had been planned for years. Working under a plan of this kind is economy and good sound common sense.

It covers buildings and material used in their construction, width of streets and alleys, eliminates business places from residential districts, covers sewage lines, water mains, proper lighting of streets and many other vexing problems which confront a city during a period of expansion. It not only does this, but saves the tax payer many a dollar by the elimination of costly mistakes.

Charlevoix is sadly in need of a comprehensive city plan and zoning ordinance. Had this plan been adopted years ago, what a fine position we would be in. We have never had a real building boom. But things are "looking up," and from what we can determine, we will see changes in this vicinity within the next year or so that will make us "sit up and take notice." Why not be ready for it? Why not make our plans today for a growth that is surely coming?

We not our neighboring city, Saulte Ste. Marie, have adopted this plan, and we quote from The News, published there, what they have to say regarding it:

"A 'sound and steady growth' is the prospect ahead of Saulte Ste. Marie, as outlined in an industrial and commercial survey which has been submitted to the city by Jacob L. Crane, Jr., city planning engineer of Chicago, who is retained to prepare a comprehensive city plan and zoning ordinance for the Soo.

"The industrial survey, which forms the basis for the city plans, points out that the Soo is probably not destined to have an industrial boom, but that, on the other hand, the strategic situation of the Soo for industrial and agricultural development and also as a tourists' center, assures a sound and steady growth."

This is a subject that interests us all. Let's give it the time and consideration we should, and then get behind a movement that will put it over.

That means the most delicious of hot breakfasts without muss or flurry.

It means the excellently "balanced ration" of protein, carbohydrates and vitamines—plus the "bulk" that makes laxatives less often needed—every day for you and yours.

"And is it far from th[illegible]er" he asked her then.

"Some would say yes, and some might call it over near," she flashed.

At that Bones slid off his barrel.

"Tamin' is what I said ye needed, and tamin' is what ye'll get, my girl."

"Tamin' Is What I Said Ye Needed, and Tamin' Is What Ye'll Get, My Girl," He Announced.

he announced. "Leave the rest to me, Silver. I'll take her aft and soon find out all she knows."

"There's Rule Four, Bill," said Silver quickly.

"Blow Rule Four! Murray and Flint wrote them blasted Articles, and they're both dead. Why should we, as are free gentlemen adventurers, have any tomfool rules like we was a king's ship? I'll take the lass and chuck five hundred pounds o' my share o' the treasure into the common fund in pay for her, —— me, lads, d'ye grudge your cap'n a little fun?"

Men shouted, "Yes," and, "No," but nobody was inclined to interfere.

"Come on, my pretty," he invited Moira.

She met his hot eyes with level scorn.

"Do ye put your finger on me, I'll either be the death of you or myself," she warned him.

He laughed uncertainly and started toward her, and as I lifted my foot to step between them the hilt of a knife was thrust into my right hand.

"Go to it," Silver's voice bade me. "Tell him ye'll fight for her."

I finished my step automatically and found myself a pace inside the pool of light surrounding Bones' barrel. Bones himself had come to a halt and was examining me with some evidence of disconcertion.

"He says he'll fight ye for her, Bill," Silver called officiously over my shoulder, and as Bones discharged a streak of curses, he muttered in my ear:

"Put your mark on her. That's old buccaneer law."

And as I still hesitated, scarce understanding him and unwilling to remove my eyes from Bones, who was drawing his own knife:

"Go on, ye fool! Anywhere! A cross on her hand'll do—wi' your knife!"

Moira heard him and grasped his meaning. She shot her left hand under my arm.

"God be good to ye, Bob," she whispered. "Sure, I'm yours."

And with the point of Silver's knife I traced a crimson cross upon her palm, certes, the oddest betrothal any couple ever had.

"Mistress O'Donnell is pledged to me," I called as loudly as I could. "Further, we had the word of Captain Flint that no harm should be done to her or any of us."

"Flint's word was no better'n mine," grinned Bones. "'Twas only as Flint had no use for women, but I'm different, and first, I'm goin' to ha' ye caught and flogged, Buckskin, and then I'll cut your ears off for a keepsake like."

He waved his arm carelessly.

"Pull him down, mates. I can't be bothered fightin' a pris'ner."

Several of his cronies made to obey this command; but Silver, Black Dog and a number of others set up a protest.

"Give the Buckskin a fair show," they shouted. "He's put his mark on her. Took her himself, he did, when Murray carried the Santissima Trinidad."

Bones' friends hung back. From the rear ranks of the circle came advice and opinions of all shades. But Silver's faction must have been primed for the incident, for they worked up such a furor in my support that they swayed the general opinion by sheer volume of noise. Silver even raised Moira's hand with bloody cross upon it and held it up for those behind to see.

"Fair play for all," proclaimed his stentorian voice. "The Buckskin was one o' Murray's crew, and he took the girl in fair fight. He's put his mark on her, and if he wants to fight for her he can, pris'ner or no pris'ner."

Bones observed the mounting turmoil with an obvious mingling of emotions. He realized he had been tricked, but he did not yet see how it had been done or comprehend the ulterior purpose of Silver's strategy. To do him justice, I do not believe that he feared me or doubted his ability to kill me in a knife-fight, for I had never had occasion to exhibit my skill with the knife before the pirates. He simply knew that he had been lured into a position where he must fight personally to maintain his authority over the crew, and the initial flare of his hatred was naturally directed against me. But he did not forget Silver.

"I'll mind this," he flung at the one-legged man as he crouched forward to meet me, knife poised across his chest and left arm extended to clutch at my knife-wrist or parry a stab from the side.

"'Tain't my doin's, Bill, if ye will ha' the girl," remonstrated Silver. "I warned ye o' Rule Four. And the cap'n's all the same as any other in a question o' honor."

"That's right," shouted a score of throats. "Cap'n's got to meet anybody."

"I'll meet some others a'ter I finish this swab," gritted Bones.

I circled away from him, gaging the effect of the swaying lanthorn-light upon the deck shadows and the feel of the pitchy planks underfoot.

"Stand to it, — ye," he snarled. "Don't let him break from the ring, mates. I want his heart for that wench to chew on—and mind the fat Dutchman doesn't jump on my back. He's a bad 'un' he is."

Silver was prompt to summon half a dozen men to block off Peter, who, having seen me use the scalping-knife of the frontier since childhood, was not in any way concerned as to what I should be able to do against a half-drunken sailor whose one idea of knife-fighting was to grab his opponent's wrist at the same time the opponent grabbed his, and then strain and heave until one of the pair tore loose and struck.

"Don't ye worry, Bill," consoled the one-legged man soothingly. "We won't let the Dutchman nor nobody else harm ye. Just you lop in and gut the Buckskin—if ye can."

"If I can!" hissed Bones. "Watch me!"

He dropped to all fours and bounded into the air in a clumsy fashion—not at all as an Iroquois warrior would have done it, hurtling like a projectile, with his whole body behind the knife. I stepped to the left and stabbed down, aiming to drive inside the collar-bone. But the light or something fooled me, and my blade slashed his cheek from eye to mouth, a great searing cut that laid open the whole side of his face.

He bellowed with surprise, and I was put out myself, for I had thought to finish him. Not a man moved for two or three breaths in the circle around us, for none had expected to see the fight terminated so quickly. Moira told me afterward that it was comical to see how Silver's jaw gaped.

Bones staggered back, the spurting blood blinding him so that he had to feel his way. I followed him slowly, half prepared for a ruse, and he must have heard me, for he called out:

"Don't let him slay me, mates! I can't see, and he's a-comin' a'ter me!"

At this a dozen pirates jolted in between us, cursing and threatening me, and I gave ground toward where my friends were standing with Silver. The one-legged man hopped out to meet me. But I had scant satisfaction from him. He snatched the knife from my hand and, bending low, spat at me with a scorn words cannot possibly convey:

"Ye bungler! As good as blind, and ye didn't do for him!"

And he swung by me on his crutch, hallooing to his friends:

"They're after Black Dog yon! Lay into the dirty swabs, mates!"

Knives were out all over the deck, and men were slashing and stabbing at one another. Bones was swallowed up in the mass of frantic humanity that milled around the restricted space between the butt of the mizzen and the rise of the poop.

A man plucked at my sleeve, and I spun about defensively to confront Peter.

"Where's Moira?" I panted.

"Darby took her. He has a plan for us to get free. Hurry, Bob! We got a good chance, ja. This is what Silver worked for, to have you kill Bones or set der crew against him."

I noticed that Peter steered me for'ard where the deck was deserted; but I asked no questions, for Silver's voice spurred me on.

"Lay aft, lads," he was shouting. "We'll show 'em what! We won't let no perishin' foul like Bill Bones go for to hold out that treasure-map on us. Couldn't even handle the Buckskin, he couldn't!"

THERE IS NO SATURATION POINT FOR HONEST VALUE

Honest value is a priceless commodity. Every purchaser seeks it, but not always with complete success.

During periods of careful buying he takes unusual pains to find it, and products of inferior merit fail to attract his patronage.

Reports then circulate that the "saturation point" in the automobile market has been reached, when in reality there will NEVER be a saturation point for honest value.

During the first six months of this year, for instance, Dodge Brothers sold 207,115 motor cars and trucks. This represents a gain of 49.3 per cent over the first six months of 1925, and continues Dodge Brothers in the enviable position of THIRD IN THE INDUSTRY.

For the three weeks ending July 17th, 23,862 motor cars and trucks were delivered to customers—an increase of 62.4 per cent over the same period last year, and impressive evidence that Dodge Brothers great sales gain is continuing through the quiet weeks of mid-summer.

The more carefully people investigate and compare, detail by detail, the factors that constitute genuine motor car value, the more inevitably Dodge Brothers market expands and will continue to expand, year after year.

Why I'm going to the Greater
MICHIGAN STATE FAIR

By Cousin Joe

WHEN YOUTH FLAMED HIGH

Last Sunday when we were all over to my wife's cousin Cherry Whipple's for dinner, I got bantering with Cherry about our romancing together in the old days before we both got married (to somebody else) and Cherry said: "Joe seems to me you're looking kind of old this year!" "That so," I snorts, "tell you what I'll do, Cherry, I'll take you to the State Fair in September and show you the best time of your young life. Midway, horse show, auto races and we'll have a bottle of pop all by ourselves." Course I wasn't very serious about it, but just then my wife comes up. "What's this—what's this, taking Cherry to the Pair?" "I accept," cuts in Cherry. "Joe invited me." Now I've got to take 'em both!

Learn How to Use Dynamite for Ditching

A big ditching demonstration will be held on August 10th, at 1:30 p. m. slow time, on the cheese factory road, four miles south of Charlevoix. This is the first road going west after passing the Marion Center Dairy, or is the cross-road, east of the Dr. Armstrong orchards.

N. A. Kessler, explosive expert from our State College will be in charge and will show how to properly use dynamite for opening ditches.

You will be greatly interested in this particular ditching job, as Bert Elliott, highway commissioner, states that it is impossible to keep the water from standing on this road and feels that the use of dynamite will be the only salvation.

Mr. Kessler is not a stranger to Charlevoix county, as he gave a demonstration this spring and proved that dynamite was the cheapest means of opening ditches.

It is hoped that all highway commissioners will attend as in all townships there are some places that are in need of ditching in order to keep the water from standing the year around. While we do not believe we need to reclaim more land, yet it is sometimes wise to ditch, the better to work land more efficiently.

It will be a sight well worth going miles to see, so plan to attend on August 10th, at 1:30 slow time, and decide for yourself if you can efficiently use dynamite in your farm or road operations.

The annual regatta which was to be held on Pine Lake last Friday, was cancelled because of so few entrants. Only a couple of the boats from the Chicago-Mackinac Island race were here in time to take part and lack of local interest were the causes for cancellation.

Sweeping Changes In State Fair's Army of Exhibits

In order to better display the exhibits at the Michigan State Fair which will be held at the State Fair Grounds at Detroit from September 5 to September 11, a number of changes in the arrangement of the exhibits is to be made.

Those who have been attending the State Fair during recent years have seen practically the same arrangement, year in and year out, with nothing to vary the monotony, and with nothing to indicate that the exhibit was new.

This policy has been changed since the present State Fair Board was appointed and managers of the fair have been instructed to go the limit in arranging the exhibits in the best possible manner.

Sweeping changes have been planned to improve the dairy and poultry exhibits, as well as those of the boys' and girls' clubs.

At the same time the women's exhibit will be held this year in the new Women's Building, which is one of the most attractive structures on the State Fair Grounds.

INTEREST IS KEEN IN CATTLE EXHIBITION CLASS AT STATE FAIR

The Michigan State Fair cattle exhibition class promises to be the best filled this year in the history of the Fair, according to Walter B. Palmer, Director of Live Stock and Exhibits of the Fair.

One new feature at the Fair September 5 to September 11 will be the county herd class providing competition between counties in the various breeds. If a single exhibitor does not have enough animals he can combine with breeders of the same breed and show in the county herd class. If he has an especially strong individual he can also win a percentage of the prize money for the one or two animals that he owns that are high point winners.

Another strong feature of this year will be a special competition among state institution herds. The management of the Fair has provided special classes so that the fancy show herds from the state farms at Traverse City, Pontiac, Ionia and other points will have plenty of competition without showing against private owners who may not have as strong herds but whose herds rank high as to breeding and utility.

The Cattle Department of the Fair will be supervised this year, the same as last, by Robert Barney, a leading breeder of Traverse City. Prof. O. E. Reed, of the Dairy Husbandry Department of the Michigan State College has given a great deal of attention to the forthcoming cattle exhibit at the State Fair. He has also been named Chairman of the National Dairy Exposition executive committee. This exposition will be held on the State Fair Grounds October 6 to 13th.

Michigan is fast becoming a great dairy state and interest in the Dairy Cattle Classes is growing with leaps and bounds.

Did you know that American pioneers sewed pigs' eyes closed to keep them under control while droving them through the country.

LAST ALPENA MILL IS CLOSED

INDUSTRY LONG VITAL TO CITY IS AT AN END

Lumber That So Long Was King, Is No More at Largest North-east Coast City

Alpena, like other Northern Michigan cities, once depended on the lumbering industry for its municipal existence. The east coast city has just seen the passing of the last vestige of this industry and in requiem the editorial writer of the Alpena News wrote the following valedictory:

Lumber, that so long was king, is no more for Alpena.

The Island Mill, the last of the fifteen or more saw mills that once hummed here, cut its last log July 20, the whistle was tied down and the last ounce of steam in the old boiler was allowed egress through the whistle.

The demise of King Lumber came so gradually that his going was hardly noticed. Like an old and worn-out human, losing his faculties one at a time, the disintegration had been gradual from the peak of thirty odd years ago. In 1889, nearly 220 million feet of lumber sawed in local mills. Next year there will be none.

Since its erection in 1866, it is estimated that the Island Mill had cut three quarters of a billion feet of lumber, over three times the output of all the mills in that record final year of the eighties. The trees from fifty thousands acres of timber land have passed through the mill.

But now the Island Mill, one of the first and the last to operate here is through and with its closing there goes the last vestige of that peculiar variety and flavor of life that attended the industry. The end of the reign of lumber marks the passing from the local stage of the race of superior men who made it possible and who it in turn produced.

Alpena long ago took cognizance of the fact that the time had come when she must seek industrial development aside from lumber, but the closing of the Island Mill re-emphasizes that fact. We must have more industry here if we are to continue thriving and that industry should call for skilled workers rather than the less skilled operatives used in our present "first stage" industries.

It behoves us to make the dying whistle of the Island Mill also the signal for cooperative action to place this community more firmly on its industrial feet.

ELKS PICNIC AND BARBECUE NEXT SUNDAY

Annual Event Held This Year in Whiting Park

Next Sunday, August 8, Whiting Park (near Boyne City) will be the scene of a gala event, namely the Elks Annual Picnic and Barbecue. This annual affair has become one of the leading entertaining features of Northern Michigan and last year was attended by over three thousand Elks and their friends at Indian River State Park.

It is not the plan of the "Best People On Earth" to centralize this big annual affair, but to distribute the glories of the event to the various localities in the jurisdiction of Petoskey Lodge No. 629, B. P. O. Elks; therefor Whiting Park was the unanimous choice for the 1926 picnic and barbecue.

The Elks Annual Picnic and Barbecue is free to everybody and the various committees in charge have not left one thing undone in the way of entertainment and eats—thereby assuring you "the time of your life." Now, don't forget the kiddies, for they also have been planned on. This also applies to your neighbors and friends.

There will be sports of all kinds, ball games, tug-of-war, band concerts, etc. In addition to prizes for these events, there will be given other tokens to the biggest Elks family present, (not in weight, but in number), the fattest, tallest, smallest, oldest, youngest Elk, etc. Ment, bread, coffee and cream will be supplied free to all attending, the committee asking that you bring your own extras and dishes.

Don't miss it. The Elks Annual Picnic and Barbecue next Sunday, August 8, at Whiting Park, near Boyne City. All ronds to this famous park will be posted, so follow the Elks signs.

NORTHERN JUDGE INJURED IN ACCIDENT

Ran Car Into Stump to Avoid Flock of Geese

Former Probate Judge Andrew L. Deuel, for about half a century a resident of Harbor Springs, and long well known in this district for his civic, legal and political activities, was seriously injured in an automobile accident on the road between Harbor Springs and Cross Village last Friday afternoon.

The injured man was accompanying the members of the Michigan Association of Probate Judges on their sightseeing trip along the shore road near Harbor Springs. Mrs. Deuel was driving the car, and when some geese started to waddle across the road she made a sharp detour to avoid killing any of them. The car struck a big stump hard and was badly damaged. Bits of glass from the windshield flew into Mr. Deuel's face and cut him badly.

Judge Deuel was rushed to Harbor Springs, where Dr. G. E. Frank gave him first aid and then taken to Petoskey hospital. Besides the face cuts he is suffering from bad scalp wounds.

TENNIS TOURNEY WELL UNDER WAY

LARGEST ENTRY REGISTERED IN HISTORY OF ASSN.

Favorites Turn in Early Wins—Classy Matches Will Develop as Play Progresses

Play in the western Michigan tennis championships got under way just before noon Monday on the clay courts at The Inn with every prospect for one of the most successful tourneys in the history of the Western Michigan Tennis association, under whose jurisdiction the tourney is being held.

A total of 73 players equaling the record entry in the district championships at Grand Rapids last year, were registered before the draw was made Monday morning. Grand Rapids and Detroit supplied the two largest delegations with Chicago furnishing an almost equally large number. Women have been attracted to the local meet in larger numbers than ever before, there being 23 entries registered, and the junior registry numbers 28 entries. Seeded players in the men's singles are: John Hennessey, Geo. O'Connel, Paul C. Kunkel, Ray Kunkel, Frank Donavan, Jack Harris, Guillerimo Aragon, Dr. W. H. Thwaites; Junior event; Wm. Irwin, Clark C. Smith, Clifton McMillan, John C. Boyd, Jr.; women's singles; Mrs. Ruth Reis, Marion Pearson, Helen Canfield and Mrs. Curt Tree.

Due to the large entry, a number of preliminary matches were played Monday. John Hennessey, the only seeded player in the early round, disposed of E. B. Bennett with ease, 6-0, 6-2. Frank T. O'Brien of Chicago and William Irwin, Grand Rapids high school star, won their preliminary round matches, dropping but three games each. O'Brien defeated Alfred W. Perrin and Irwin eliminated Robert Miles.

All seeded players who took part in the Monday afternoon matches came through with little trouble. Donovan, Notre Dame No. 1 man, defeated A. R. Cohen 6-1, 6-1, and Dr. Thwaites won from Conrad Ruchelshons at the same score. Ted Joslyn, tournament referee, won his match from William Kutsche 6-2, 6-1, and Herbert Fox entered the second round by defeating John Knight 6-3, 6-3, but Don Matter had difficulty with S. K. Cartwright of Detroit, one of the Auto's city's best entries, finally emerging on top after three long sets 4-6, 7-5, 6-4. Rafael Gonzales, captain of the Philippines Davis cup team, eliminated H. A. Cartier, tournament chairman, 6-4, 6-2.

Complete results Monday were as follows:

Preliminary

Allan Lamont, Charlevoix, def. Nelson Gates, Elk Rapids, 6-0, 6-1; Obie Smith, Bay View, def. Clare Usher, Charlevoix, 6-1, 6-3; John C. Boyd, Bay View, def. C. E. Macomber, Saginaw, 8-6, 6-0.

First Round

Phillip Steiner, Chicago, def. William Garby, Terre Huute, Ind., 7-5, 7-5; Frank Donovan, Detroit, def. A. R. Cohen, Charlevoix, 6-1, 6-0; Narval C. Maxwell, Detroit, def. Rayner Field, Charlevoix, 6-2, 6-2; Don Matter, Grand Rapids, def. S. K. Cartwright, Detroit, 4-6, 7-5, 6-4; Herbert Fox, Grand Rapids, def. John Knight, Kalamazoo, 6-3, 6-3; Curt Tree, Detroit, def. E. M. Jaffee, Charlevoix, 6-1, 6-1; Ted Joslyn, Grand Rapids, def. William Kutsche, Charlevoix, 6-2, 6-1; C. H. McMillan, St. Louis, def. Henry Atkins, Indinnapolis, 3-6, 6-1, 6-1; Dr. W. H. Thwaites, Grand Rapids, def. Conrad Ruchelshons, Indianupolis, 6-0, 6-1; George Dinwiddile def. Willard Wilcox, Elk Rapids, 6-1, 6-0; Raftel Gonzales, Philippine Islands, def. H. A. Cartier, Charlevoix, 6-4, 6-2.

Favorites continued to dominate the second day's matches of the tournament Tuesday, when play was resumed after being interferred with by rain Monday night. After some delay Tuesday morning, due to wet courts, the tournament got away in full swing Tuesday afternoon.

Paul Kunkel of Cincinnati, seeded No. 3, won his first match early Tuesday afternoon by defenting Reuben Robertson, champion of Asheville, N. C., in the fastest game of the tournament, 6-1, 6-3. Robertson, who is also entered in the junior event, forced Kunkel on a baseline game, but was outclassed when the Cincinnati man dropped short chops over the net that fell dead for points.

W. Gordon Parker of Charlevoix, whose doubles team ranked nationally several years ago, had little difficulty in disposing of A. F. Riese of Saginaw, 6-1, 6-0. Parker's driving was exceptionally fast and accurate. Summary of matches played Tuesday afternoon follow: C. Coan, Detroit, def, Paul Corbett, Detroit, 6-4, 6-0; John Hennessey, seeded 1, def. Obie Smith, Bay View, 6-1, 6-1; Paul Dunakin, Grand Rapids, def. Carl Taravis, Notre Dame, 6-4, 8-6; C. C. Schwegler, Midland, def. A. Livingstan, city, 6-2, 6-0; Edwin Peterson, Grand Rapids, def. NOTED EXPLORER MAKES US A VISIT

E. F. McDONALD MEMBER OF MacMILLAN EXPEDITION

Yacht Zenith Carried Powerful Radio Equipment Used on Polar Expedition

Commander E. F. McDonald, a member of the MacMillan polar expedition which in August of last year reached a point within eleven degrees of the north pole; docked his yacht, Zenith, at Hamilton's boat yard last Saturday and Sunday.

Mr. McDonald, who is president of the Zenith Radio corporation, accompanied by his mother, sisters and a party of friends, are making a cruise of the Great Lakes and stopped in at Charlevoix according to his usual custom, visiting friends of old standing here.

Aboard the yacht were many interesting specimens picked up while on the polar expedition. An Eskimo canoe, made of seal skin, was quite and attraction. The queer craft was about ten feet long, 2 feet wide and drew probably 2 or 3 inches of water, the only opening on the deck being a small hole about 18 inches across where the paddler seated himself. It would take an experienced skipper to keep the craft upright and after looking it over we would judge that the Eskimo must be a master of the art. Other articles included a fur Eskimo suit, a long dog whip with a walrus tusk for a handle and many other articles native to the dwellers of the arctic region.

On board the yacht was installed the radio receiving and broadcasting equipment carried on the Bowdoin, one of the ships used on the expedition. The outfit is a powerful one and Mr. McDonald talked with New York City while in the harbor here.

A signal bomb, with parachute attached, used on the polar expedition, was sent up from the dock while the party was here Saturday evening. Considerable excitement was caused locally by this stunt, many reports being circulated to the effect that an areoplane had burned in the air, forced landings, etc. May this information set matters straight in this respect.

A trip to the yacht and a talk with the jovial "Mac" was indeed a pleasure and a treat we would not miss.

We might state here that the MacMillan expedition was the first to use areoplanes in an attempt to reach the north pole, and, although they were unsuccessful in their attempt, the expedition gathered much valuable data for use in future attempts, which have been successful since that time.

HOSPITAL TAG DAY SATURDAY

SUBSTANTIAL PRIZES FOR TAG DAY WORKERS

Charity Dances and Other Benefit Affairs Scheduled This Week Along With Drive

The annual Tag Day drive for the benefit of the Charlevoix Hospital will be held this coming Saturday, August 14th.

This annual event is put on for the purpose of raising funds to help carry on the work of the local hospital which is partially dependent upon outside help to defray its operating expenses and the deficit must be raised from other sources if the hospital is to continue doing business.

The Charlevoix Hospital has established itself as an indispensible part of the community life. It has been transformed from an impossible and unsightly structure to an institution of beauty and efficient service, and with its beautiful grounds and situation of eminence is one of the beauty spots of our City-the-Beautiful. When making these statements we do not forget our debt to the summer resorters and town people, whose unselfish and whole-hearted support have made this transformation possible. Every charity affair held to raise funds for the hospital have met with spontaneous response from the people of the town and surrounding country and it is this splendid spirit that has made the institution a success from the very start.

So when we make announcement that the annual Tag Day will be held on Saturday of this week, it is with the knowledge that no urging is necessary to make it a success as in former years.

The Tag Day drive is in charge of Mrs. M. A. Levinson, chairman. Those wishing to sell tags may report to her at Levinson's store where the returns will be received after the day's drive. Substantial prizes for those taking in the greatest amount of money are as follows:

1st prize, boys, $5.00 in gold.
1st prize, girls, $5.00 in gold.
2nd prize, boys, kodak.
2nd prize, girls, kodak.
3rd prize, boys, baseball mitt.
3rd prize, girls, silk scarf.
4th prize, boys, pen knife.
4th prize, girls, pair silk stockings.
5th prize, boys, silk tie.
5th prize, girls, silk vest.

These prizes have been generously donated by the business men of the city and will be on display in the window of Levinson's store.

Other affairs for the benefit of the hospital are scheduled this week at the Beach Hotel and The Inn and the drive for funds is bound for success.

HOSPITAL ANNUAL MEETING AUGUST 18

Three Members to Be Elected and Year's Business Reviewed

The annual meeting and election of officers of the Charlevoix Hospital will be held in the council rooms, Carnegie Library, Wednesday evening, August 18, at 7:30 p. m.

At this meeting the annual report of the superintendent, secretary and treasurer will be read, and other business pertaining to the hospital management taken care of.

Three members are to be elected to fill the expired terms, of C. N. Bridge, P. D. Campbell and A. J. Usher. Present members of the board are: M. A. Levinson, president; C. N. Bridge, secretary; A. J. Usher, treasurer; H. A. Craig, Geo. W. Weaver, Fred E. Cartier, George Glados, P. D. Campbell and W. H. Miller. Three new members are chosen each year, the full board membership being nine.

It is hoped the citizens of Charlevoix will attend this meeting. In former years the attendance has been so limited that it was necessary to either postpone the meeting or go out and dig up the required fifteen to constitute a quorum. It is your hospital, your funds that are being spent, so why not at least once a year become interested enough to attend the annual meeting.

John J. Flinn, C. S. B., member of the board of lectureship of the mother church, the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass., will give a free lecture at the Palace Theatre, Sunday, August 15, at 3 p. m.—Adv. 32t1

CONCRETE ROADS MOST FAVORED

SUCH IS SENTIMENT AT BOYNE CITY MEETING

Building Cost of Concrete Highway Around Pine Lake Gone Into In Every Detail

The meeting of the Charlevoix County Good Roads association, held last week at the Wolverine in Boyne City developed some real enthusiasm for the building of a concrete road around Lake Charlevoix. After much meaty discussion of the benefits of concrete roads, their cost to build, and the means for financing the road in question, a committee was appointed to get the figures and facts in shape for presentation to the people concerned, to the board of supervisors and the state.

It was a characteristic of this meeting that little breath was wasted in glittering generalities by those who spoke. At the outset it became apparent that there is a surprisingly strong sentiment in favor of concrete roads. Members of the Boyne City Chamber of Commerce pointed out the disappointment of such a road as that from Boyne City to Wulloon Lake, which is now a bed of stifling dust and the subject of great complaint from tourists and permanent residents.

This led to the matter of maintenance cost on gravel roads. Boyne citizens complained of the burden they are carrying, when their experience shows practically no maintenance expense for the two miles of concrete they now have. As throwing light on this matter, Mr. Burlingame of Grand Rapids, a guest of the meeting informed that Kent county spends from $1,000 to $1,600 per mile annually to keep up its gravel roads. This, it was pointed out, would go far in a sinking fund, to pay for the building of the concrete roads.

Ways and means of financing the construction were taken up. It had been estimated by Mr. Sloan and Mr Rogers of East Jordan that the grading and road bed now in would reduce the cost of laying the concrete to approximately $20,000 per mile. Mr. Sloan also showed how further savings might be effected in the provision and washing of gravel, inasmuch as the gravel and water are so easily accessible to all parts of the proposed road.

Members of the board of supervisors made it clear that Charlevoix county is not now legally able to bond for a sufficient sum to even make a decent start on the project. The only other alternative, therefore, would be to make use of the Covert Act, under which the construction is petitioned by a majority of property owners most directly benefited by the proposed road and paid for over a long period.

At first blush, the sentiment of the meeting was that this would impose too heavy a cost on a few persons. But actual experiences of construction under the Covert Act were cited to show that the method is in favor where it has been tried—that actual appreciation in property value has more than absorbed the cost to owners. The meeting heard how a road

BELVEDERE HOTEL HAS FULL HOUSE

Advance Reservations Indicate Better Than Average Month

The Belvedere Hotel management announce that they have been enjoying a full house for the past week, a condition which is very gratifying to them and the city. Surrounding resorts have reported a dull season, and such reports as the aforementioned show that Charlevoix is not experiencing the same condition.

Mrs. Sears, manager of the Belvedere Hotel, states that reservations are being received daily and some have had to be turned down because of the lack of accommodations. Other hotels in the city are reporting the same condition, so we may judge that Charlevoix is getting her share of the resort business.

Applicants for teachers' certificates should file their credits with commissioner of schools, Charlevoix, Mich., at once. Only those possessing the credits allowed by the Department of Public Instruction will be granted certificates.

CITY VISITED BY LARGE MONOPLANE

Carried President of Continental Motor Co. and Party

The large monoplane which made several flights over the city last week was the private plane of Mr. Judsen, president of the Continental Motor Co., Detroit, who with a party of friends were on a trip through this region.

The plane has a capacity of seventeen passengers, including the crew and is powered with three motors. Meals for the party of fifteen making the trip were served aboard the areoplane, which was equipped with a galley and carried a cook. Mr. Judson's yacht, the Comoco, docked at Hamilton's boat yard two days and proceeded from there to South Manitou Island, where it met the party on the plane. Mr. Judson owns the island and has provided a landing place there. The giant monoplane is probably the largest ever to visit Charlevoix.

ANNIVERSARY SALE TO BE EXTENDED

Big Selling Event Continued to Tuesday of Next Week

Complying with requests for an extension of time on the big 55th Anniversary Sale now going on at the Charlevoix Hardware company, another week will be given people of this section to buy hardware, furniture and electrical goods at greatly reduced prices.

The sale will be continued until Tuesday evening, August 17, at 6:00 p. m. Since the opening day the store has been filled with eager buyers, who fully realized the wonderful bargains offered. Sales were not confined to the immediate vicinity, as people patronized the sale from Boyne City, East Jordan, Central Lake, Bellaire, Petoskey, and as far north as Pellston.

This has been, without doubt, the greatest selling event ever staged in this section, and the liberal response from the buying public is sufficient evidence that people buy where the best values and bargains are offered.

INDIAN PICNIC GREAT SUCCESS

ESTIMATED 5,000 PEOPLE ATTENDED DURING EVENT

Indians Elected Officers and Appoint Chairmen for Districts Throughout State

It is estimated that in the neighhood of 5,000 people attended the annual picnic of the Ottawa and Chippewa association of Michigan, held at the Charlevoix auto camp on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of last week. It was the occasion of a revival of the old-time Indian fetes formerly held at Cross Village.

The Red Men wore the raiment and bend work of olden days. They were decorated with war paint and admired by white visitors who outnumbered the aborigines by about three to one. They danced the negoso-nemen, or war dance, both afternoon and evening, the latter being around a great camp fire which made the scene most picturesque. They wore feathered hats (we-quam) from the turkey, (Missana) and one dressed in negrosawns, or Indian attire. This probably was the most attractive of all the costumes, and it was explained to the visitors that Indians formerly regarded the possession of eagle feathers as a great honor because the eagle soared so high and the guns then used were of short range. To bring down an eagle was regarded as an extraordinary feat.

The same sort of feathered hats were worn as were used when the Indians fought their famous battles with white men, the aborigines calling the whites wapschewesie bemotgagis. There was a long parade, a tug of war, Indian chiefs and others spoke and there was music.

Many interesting stories were told by the old chiefs. They said that formerly they had called the white men checkmucbannan, or the knife man, because in killing he showed no quarter to fighters or noncombatants, claiming their dunaway moganamuck (relatives) always were put to the sword no matter how young or old they chanced to be.

Dr. John J. Reycraft, of Petoskey, always a friend of the Indians and a strong advocate of forest conservation, was one of the principal speakers, and his address was partly in Indian and partly in English. He addressed the aborigines as friends and good citizens and expressed pleasure in seeing them there in native attire, with deer skin coats and trousers of tanned hides. He added that he was aware they regretted very much that their native heaths had been denuded of their forests, thus losing to them their wild game, food and raiment, and he felt that white folks could not blame them for feeling disgruntled when the land they so loved was laid waste, and he could understand their intense animosity when the sawmill came to take the cover from all their game.

"You loved the blankets, beads, shawls and whisky that the white man brought you, and you finally laid down your opposition," stated Dr. Reycraft, and he spoke of Charlevoix being named for the chingwock, or pine, that was so beautiful in this region years ago. He reminded the red men how they overcame their dislike to shoot the beaver until the blankets and shawls were provided by the white explorer, and lauded the Indian's love for his horse.

At a business meeting held during the picnic, the following officers were elected to head the association for the coming year: Pres., Joe Foster Otto, Petoskey; vice pres., Wm. A. Shomin, Charlevoix; clerk, Frank Greenlenf, Petoskey; treas., Christine Otto, Petoskey. Chairmen elected for different districts in the association were: Sho-bo-gi-we-tin, High Island; Paul Walker, Mt. Pleasant; Geo. Poutiac, Northport; Peter Walker, Charlevoix; Moses James, Walpol Island, Ont.; Joe Ettawageshik, Harbor Springs; W. M. Walhnzie, Boyne City; Isla Wasaqunm, Bay Shore. The place for the next annual picnic was not announced, but it was stated that it would be either at Charlevoix or Harbor Springs. Canoe races and other sports will be added next year and the festivities will extend over five days instead of four.

Cow-Test Association Reorganized

The leading dairymen of Charlevoix county have again re-organized and started the new year the first of August with some 26 members, and over 320 cows to be tested.

The results of last year's work are sufficient proof that the members are receiving many benefits and are finding that cow-test work is the greatest agency yet devised for dairymen to make money out of their cows. In 1924, the average cow in the association made 272 pounds of butterfat, in 1925, the average was raised to 289 pounds, while this last year every cow made an average of 320 pounds, or an increase of nearly 50 pounds more production per cow in this short length of time. A grade Jersey cow owned by Geo. Meggison, Charlevoix, finished the year with the remarkable production of 721 pounds of fat. Arthur Shepard, East Jordan, had a high herd average with 465 pounds per cow. Each year a gain is being made; more than sufficient to pay the cost of the work.

The following men will guide the destinies for the new year:

Arthur Shepard, East Jordan, President.

Bert Lumley, Boyne City, Vice President.

E. J. Edwards, Charlevoix, Sec'y-Treas.

Clinton Blanchard, Phelps; Dan Swanson, East Jordan, Directors.

CONVICTS GET LIFT UPWARD

STATE POLICE ASSIST PAROLED MEN TO GO STRAIGHT ON RELEASE.

A part of the work of the State Police of which very little is known by the public is that of looking after paroled prisoners after they have served their minimum sentences in any of the prisons. The intention is to give them such supervision as will lead to reformation where possible but also to safeguard the community against further lapses into crime. This work of supervision is in the charge of State Police in the industrial communities and where there are posts of troopers.

Required to Report

In Wayne county there are some 560 men under this supervision under charge of Lieut. Wm. Boettcher. Each paroled man is require to report at once upon release and he is aided in securing a job. He is warned that he must remain at work, must not frequent poolrooms or drinking places or associate with bad company. Any lapse upon his part is cause for his return to prison.

It is found that from 15 to 20 per cent of paroled prisoners have to be returned, the remainder going straight at least during the parole period.

Under the present system, every paroled man has some money upon release which he has earned while a prisoner. There are only a few who lack sufficient funds to carry them through until they earn something. A special arrangement has been made with the employment manager of one Detroit factory whereby such men are given work in his plant and their room and board paid for until their first pay day.

Chance to Reform.

Only the employment manager of the factory knows that the man employed is a paroled convict. This assists in keeping the men at work. The State Police do not go to the factories to check up but visit the men's homes and also get reports from the factory manager. In this way lapses are quickly detected.

In checking up on the paroled men, the officers visit the county jail, attend the "showups" of prisoners at police headquarters, attend court hearings and also the domestic relations court. It is very difficult for a former convict to go wrong again without being detected at once and returned. The State Police also work with county probation officers who are under authority of the courts.

Pictures and fingerprints are made and kept by the parole division so that if a man violates the rules and leaves the state, a circular is printed and sent out at once and he is almost certain to be recaptured and sent back to serve out his sentence.

In very few cases have the State Police found that local police officers followed up former convicts and interfered with their getting and keeping employment and going straight. In such case the parole-officer acts as the paroled man's friend.

Recently, in the upper peninsula, State Police have been requested to act as probation officers in circuit court cases in certain instances.

MURDER CASES WITH MYSTERY ANGLE SOLVED

PATIENT WORK BY TROOPERS RESULTS IN SOLUTION OF CRIMES

Conviction in Two Trials and Third Nears Prosecution Stage.

Service in the solution of three unusual murder cases, each having an element of mystery, was given by the Michigan State Police in three widely separated counties recently. In each case their co-operation was requested by local officials who realized the value of specially trained men.

From the standpoint of motive, the most remarkable of these cases was that resulting from the explosion of a bomb in the Three Lakes Tavern near Muskegon. August Kurhaech, his daughter Jeannette and her fiance, William R. Francke of Chicago, were the victims. It was thought that the package containing the bomb held a wedding present and the three had gathered to open it.

First Clue

Ernest Ramsey, chief of the State Police secret service division, got his first clue through the wrapper of the parcel, which had fallen into a barrel of water and was thus preserved from the explosion. The address stickers were of a type which could be traced and it was found that similar stickers had been sold to Asa K. Bartlett, constable of Blue Lake township. The writing was found to be similar to his. Then search of a machine shop in which he had worked disclosed other clues. A complete case was made and then Bartlett, being confronted with the facts, confessed and was sentenced to life imprisonment for the triple murder. It was a case in which the following up of very slight clues led to full revelation of the facts.

The Dorling Case

A somewhat similar situation in many respects developed in the murder of Roy Lee in Sanilac county. This was the outcome of a drinking party in which a number of persons had taken part at a farmhouse. Lee was found dead in an automobile with a bullet wound in his head. Mrs. Pearl Dorling committed suicide at the funeral. She was one of those who had taken part in the carouse.

The sheriff of Sanilac county asked the co-operation of State Police and they followed many clues. The deciding one was the finding of the revolver with which the crime had been committed. It had been dropped at a point where Pearl Dorling got out of an automobile on the return trip. Dorling was arrested and, after being told of the evidence accumulated against him, notified the county officers that he desired to confess, which he did in the presence of reporters.

Later Dorling attempted to deny his confession and accused the State Police of having beaten him. This was disproved at the trial and he was convicted of manslaughter.

An Unusual Crime

Even more mysterious was the case of Philip J. Foley. This young man had married the daughter of a gold refiner at Pontiac and succeeded to the management, building up the business to a prosperous state. In doing so he had some differences of opinion with his wife's family. After a quarrel his wife left their home and went to her father's place. The next day she called the Pontiac police and said she desired to go to her home but wished an escort because of having quarrelled with her husband.

The police officers found Foley's body at the foot of the stairs. Mrs. Foley's purse and keys were in the house. On the kitchen table were a whisky bottle and glasses and two chairs had been overturned. Foley's head showed cuts and bruises and his throat was cut. He had been dead for some time.

Local officers were informed that Foley had consorted with underworld characters, that he had been attentive to women and that he had operated the refinery as a "fence". Various clues were followed up but without success.

When State Police were called in they investigated these reports and found that Foley was not guilty of the things which had been told of him but was an energetic business man. To make certain of the cause of death, the body was exhumed and it was disclosed, for the first time, that he had been killed by a bullet from a small automatic revolver. Just such a weapon was owned by Foley.

Examination of fingerprints on the whisky glasses and bottle showed that they had been handled by two persons, the policeman who discovered the body and a member of the family. With the facts disclosed, it was possible to reconstruct the circumstances of the crime. Foley had been shot as he entered the front door, the person who shot him being on the stairs. The other injuries to the body had followed and the person who committed the crime had then covered the body with rugs, washed at the kitchen sink and left the house by the back door.

CLEANUP SQUAD SETS A RECORD

CAPT. I. H. MARMON

The cleanup squad of the Michigan State Police has been concentrating its efforts principally in the vicinity of Detroit and a very large quantity of smuggled liquor has been seized while a number of breweries have been found and closed. This squad is under command of Captain Ira H. Marmon, who introduced the fingerprint bureau at Lansing and is recognized as one of the outstanding authorities on criminal identification work in the country.

Lieut. Alonzo Gillette is his assistant. The squad visits roadhouses and has closed a number of disorderly places as well as cutting down the amount of public gambling in the suburbs of Detroit.

It is claimed that the Michigan State Police cleanup squad has made more seizures of liquor, in proportion to the number of men engaged, than any other similar body of police officers in the United States.

Rumble seats are justly popular. They add a smart, rakish touch to roadster lines, and increase the carrying capacity by two passengers.

That Dodge Brothers Sport Roadster now provides this convenience, will be welcome news to thousands.

Like the main seat, it is deeply upholstered in gray Spanish genuine leather, and the seat back is high and well pitched, providing unusual comfort.

When closed, the rear compartment is absolutely waterproof, even in rainiest weather.

Ample space is provided behind the main seat for golf clubs, suit cases, tennis rackets and similar luggage.

The Charlevoix Boat Club has arranged a very interesting program of races for their first attempt at a regatta to be held on Lake Charlevoix, Sunday afternoon, August 15, at 2:30 sharp.

Two races for outboard motors have been arranged, the first to be for those with motors of 14 cubic inches piston displacement or less, and one for those having more than 14 cubic inches. Two cups have been donated as prizes for these races, one by the Brady Boat Co., and the other by the Boat Club. Speed boat enthusiasts will see these small boats do around the 20 miles per hour mark Sundny and the races will be well worth watching.

Races for speed hoats have been divided into two classes. There will also be n free-for-all race on the program. Clnsses for the big boats are for those with 100 h. p. or less and those with 50 h. p. or less. Two entries have been received from Harhor Springs and other are expected from neighboring resorts.

The course has been arranged so the boats will he in full view of the spectators at all times, being a mile long with hairpin turns, with the starting and finishing points in the middle of the course. Outboard motor boats will race two miles and speed boats 6 miles.

First and second prizes will be awarded for all classes in the races and will be displayed in the window at Bellinger's store. One of the large cups was donated by John R. Wineman, locnl hoating enthusiast. It is hoped that a large crowd of spectators will turn out to the races and encourage the new boat club in their efforts. A success this time will mean other regattas in the near future.

Mrs. Roy Brady announces that the Charlevoix Boat club has been admitted to the Mississippi Vnlley Power Bont association and have received a year book of individual receipts for members, which may be used as calling cards when visiting other clubs affiliated with the M. V. P. B. A. There are 57 clubs in the association and the visiting cards will prove a great convenience to local members when visiting other clubs.

Molra hailed us from the shelter of the capstan.

"Will it be you, Bob? Oh, thank God, thank God!"

"And your hand?" I stammered.

She pressed it to my lips.

"There!" said she. "If you will be so chary of other places."

I strove to redress my fault, and she lay for one precious moment in my arms.

"Are you sure ye will have meant it?" she asked shyly.

"Meant it! Since the morning I heard the lilt of your voice in—"

A low whistle came from over the side to larboard.

"'Tis Darby!" she cried. "He slid down the anchor-cable to get at one of the boats they will have lowered by the side ladder for the water-party that was going ashore, and didn't."

Peter beckoned urgently from the rail.

"We don't talk," he ordered grimly. "We go."

There was a coil of spare cable handy, and we dropped it over-side, sliding one by one into the jolly-boat which Darby held steady beneath the heft of the bowsprit. The Walrus had swung with the tide until her stern was toward the town, and Darby and I took the oars and rowed quietly along the mass of the pirate's hull in the direction of the scattered lights that represented Savannah. How beautiful they seemed to us, those tiny glimmers of rush-lights and lanthorns in a clearing in the wilderness! They spelled safety, perhaps home.

But we were none too sure of ourselves yet. The big vessel loomed over us, her gunports like a row of gouging tusks, her spurs and rigging a monstrous net poised for casting. Her decks seethed with lawless men, fighting and running, with harsh outcries and the clashing of steel and an occasional pistol shot.

We passed the cluster of boats moored by the side ladder, unwilling to risk the time it would take to cut them adrift. We passed the poop, where a particularly savage fray was going on. Men were battering at the door to the cabin companionway and one called to "roll up a chase-gun, and give the —— —— a round-shot in his belly."

We rowed on under the Walrus' stern, and there we came upon an amazing spectacle.

A longboat was always towed astern for the greater convenience in case there was a sudden necessity for its use at sea. This boat had been drawn beneath the stern windows, from which a man was lowering a heavy box or chest, which a second man was receiving into its bow. The man in the longboat heard the rattle of our oars and gave us one lightning glance before he slashed at the mooring-rope and leaped to his own oars. The tide carried him immediately behind us, and I had a vision of a bloody face wrapped in an old shirt. If he knew who we were he gave no sign. He huddled onto a thwart and pulled downstream with the tide.

A Man Was Lowering a Heavy Box or Chest, Which a Second Man Was Receiving Into Its Bow.

But the man in the stern windows was not so reticent. He leaned far out, wringing his hands and clamoring to be saved:

"Oh, Master Bonos, ye wouldn't go for to leave poor Ben Gunn as stood by ye stanch to the end, and held the cabin door the while ye shot the bolt. Ah, and them —— villains are a-hammerin' it this moment. Don't 'ee go, and leave me like this! They'll keelhaul me, they will. They'll trice me to the cat."

"Back oars, Darby," I said. "We can't leave the poor fellow."

"And him with Bones!" protested Darby.

"'Twas not his fault."

We rowed under the stern, and I called up to the steward—

"Jump into the water and we'll pick you up, Ben."

"Who're you?" he answered shrilly.

"'Tis Master Ormerod."

I could hear the blows on the door at the end of the companionway.

"Hasten, man! We can't wait forever."

He jumped, and we hauled him, dripping, into our midst.

CHAPTER XX

Home

A chorus of yelping certified to the invasion of the main cabin, but its note of triumph was changed to consternation as Silver's bloodhounds discovered that their bird had flown.

"Gone!"

"The —— knave's scooped us!"

"Boats, lads; boats!"

And presently the click-clock of oars behind us caused Darby and me to redouble our labors. We drove ashore several rods downstream from the town on the shallow bluff, and we dared not wait to seek shelter within its log walls. Truth to tell, we doubted now that the town itself spelled safety to us. The Walrus' carronades would make short work of such defenses as Savannah had to boast.

So we pelted up the bluff by a sandy path that debouched upon the cleared fields outside the stockade, urged on by that persistent oar-rattle and the shouts the pirates exchanged betwixt their several boats. Whether they were following us we could not discover, for the night was black as a cellar-vault; but we left nothing to chance, and ran hot-foot through the plantations of the citizens, overhearing, as we passed, the excited comments of the men on the firing-platforms of the stockade, who evidently anticipated an attack from their ugly visitor in the river. We never turned for breath until we had gained the verge of the forest.

Peter was now in his element. He could find his way about a strange countryside by day or night as easily as a sailor could navigate the trackless wastes of the sea, and he led us in a beeline north and east in the general direction of the outlying settlements which intervened betwixt Savannah and the Carolinas. An hour or so after dawn we emerged upon a village in a clearing, whose inhabitants eyed us dubiously until Darby produced one of the golden doubloons from the store he had acquired during his reign as Flint's favorite.

These people had never before seen gold, and for a doubloon and an onza they sold us an old but serviceable musket with bullet-pouch, powder-horn and store of ammunition, and deerskin garments. They also sold us a small quantity of salt and flour, and put us on the trail to Charleston in the Carolinas.

Of our journey thither I can say only that it was such an odyssey as the frontier-dwellers of our provinces have long been accustomed to. To Peter and me its perils of forest and stream, red savages, and wild beasts, were far less formidable than those of the sea, and Moira and Darby thrived upon the experience—so much so that when at last, brier-torn and footsore, we entered Charlestan's sedate streets and found awaiting us an ample choice of packet ships to the north we four were unanimous for continuing our journey by land.

"Neen," said Peter. "I don't ever go to der sea again, Boh."

"Ah, who would be fool enough in his ignorance to he wandherin' wet and bedraggled on the salt waves of the sea when he might venture the forests and be shootin' at the red deer and the bears and the catamounts and it may be an Injun, if he was in the full tide o' his luck?" snorted Darby.

"I seem to remember one who was all for the sea, and would wave the skull and crossbones in anybody's face," I jeered.

"Troth, and I knew less then than I do now," he replied unblushingly. "Them pirates was enough to break the heart of Pontius Pilate. Barrin' Flint, there wasn't a one of them would he able to hold his own against such as us."

"Silver might—"

"He was a clever one, Long John; but he'll be in throuble, you see if he's not," insisted Darby. "Too graspin' he in by half."

Moira, sitting beside me on the settle of the tavern-porch, twined her arm in mine with a slight shrnidder.

But Peter shook his head solemnly.

"Neen," he said. "Der sea did not take them all. They died from der greed dot cankered in their hearts. I do not like der sea, but der sea is der same as der landt. It works Gott's will."

We were silent for a space, looking out upon the lusty life about us, the negroes in their bright bandanna headdresses, the planters passing on half-thoroughbreds, the decent townsfolk in hodden-gray.

"And you, Ben Gunn?" I said to the steward who sat across the porch from us. "Will you come north with us? My father—"

He jumped up, writhing and twisting in an excess of embarrassment, aye, and with something of fear in his face.

"'Twas yourself was promisin' me I'd not ha' to wear a livery-shult," he protested. "And before that ye said as how ye'd find me a berth as a real, tarry sailor-man, a-pullin' on ropes and standin' tricks at the wheel. Yes, ye did, Master Ormerod; and I believed ye, I did—though there's a many think naught o' foolin' poor Ben Gunn."

"I'll not fool you, Ben," I answered. "If you would go to sea, to sea shall you go."

And on the morrow I found him a berth upon a Barbados packet, cautioning him to employ discretion in discussing his past life, lest he be handed over to the admiralty officials as a former pirate. He was our last link with the infamous company that had owned the joint rule of my great-uncle and John Flint, and what became of him or of the remnants of Flint's crew aboard the Walrus I do not know to this day. But from the fact that the Walrus was never reported again I have suspected that she must either have been wrecked or voluntarily abandoned by her people. She left Savannah within twenty-four hours of our landing there—so much I discovered by correspondence with a merchant of that town.

Did she put back to the Rendezvous and ransack the island's surface for the treasure Flint had buried? Or did she try for the gold we concealed on the Dead Man's Chest? Hopeless ventures, either of the two! As well search for a certain grain of corn in a heaping bin.

And what happened to Bill Bones? Did he elude the pursuit of his deserted comrades and seek an opportunity to lift Flint's treasure for himself? I'll swear that was his intent from the first—precisely as I'll take oath that had Silver been first to get his hands upon Flint's map he would have plotted so that only he and a small circle of his immediate familiars should have shared in the prize. Ruthless scoundrels, one and all! But perhaps Bones never won clear. Perhaps Silver fastened upon his trail and pursued him with that fantastic vengeance they called the Black Spot. I have often wondered what it might be.

As to the treasure, they are welcome to it or any part of it if they can find it. Moira and I talked over the desirability of notifying her Jacobite friends of the hoard that was hurled on the Dead Man's Chest, and for a time she leaned toward this course; but after she had dwelt a while in the Hanoverian prosperity of New York she revolted against the idea of taking any step which would embroil the peace of the realm, and any lingering doubts in her mind were dissipated by the titanic conflict of the Seven Years' war, with its world-wide convulsion of nations that set armies marching to battle all the way from the parched plains of India to the forests of our wilderness country.

But I am galloping ahead of my story. Drop back across the years—'tis no more of an effort than it was for us to slide down the cable over the bow of the Walrus that night off Savannah—to the settle on the porch of the tavern in Charleston. Ben Gunn was disposed of; our plans were made for the northward journey along the seaboard. All that remained to be done was to come by a priest to wed Moira and me; and that, it seemed, was impossible short of Baltimore, in Maryland. Yet at the last our luck held, for the day we were to start turned stormy and we delayed our departure; and that afternoon a French West Indiaman put into the harbor under stress of the weather. Among her company was a kindly Franciscan, and he readily agreed to perform the ceremony.

For the rest, we rode into New York about four of the clock on the afternoon of April the 24th, in the year 1755. My father was in the counting-room of our house in Pearl street, and he came to the door at the sound of the horses' hoofs on the cobbles. The sun was sloping out of the west full into his eyes; and for the time that it took me to dismount and swing Moira down from her saddle he stood dazed, fearful lest the dazzling light was playing tricks with him.

"Is it truly you, Robert?" he cried. "But it must be, for there are Peter and Darby."

"Yes, father," I answered. "And I have brought home another."

He opened his arms with an eager smile.

"There's room here for two of you, boy. Perles, you have but followed in my footsteps and fetched home a wife from your adventures."

"She is the little Irish maid I—"

"Whoever she is, she's more than welcome. But come in, come in, the pair of you. Safe and well—and with a wife! Robert, I can scarce credit it. After a whole year! Peter, God bless you! I knew with you he'd come to no harm. Ah, Darby, you have more sense in that red noddle of yours than when you left here; and if you stuck by Master Robert y'are forgiven. What a tale you'll all have to tell!"

That night as I lay in the upper room I had occupied since childhood I was aroused by a distant clatter and jangling which became louder and louder. At the corner it broke off with a heavy clang, and a pompous voice proclaimed:

"Past twelve o'clock of a fine, bright night, and Master Robert Ormerod is home from his captivity amongst the West India pirates. God save the king and the worshipful magistrates of New York!"

'Twas Diggory the watchman; and, listening to him, I recalled how Silver had cozened him the night I was kidnaped, and therent I fell a-chuckling until Moira stirred sleepily and complained—

"'Tis an ill thing if ye'll not sleep the first night we will be in your own home, Bob."

"No, no, sweetheart," I said. "I was but thinking what an odd bundle of accident is this life we live. For if that fellow braying upon the corner had not been a stupid fool I should never have seen you after I took you to the White's Head."

"Do you think so?" she retorted. "Then 'tis you will be the fool, for if Captain Murray had not carried you after me I should have contrived to return to New York, though it kept me treading the highways and byways of the world some fifty years. Now get you to sleep! I am none of your wives to encourage a husband in loose fancies and romantical longings. Your wandering days are by and done with, and the sooner you square your back on them the better will I be pleased. I'll not let you forth again, and of that you may be prime confident!"

So I turned over and went to sleep.

Why I'm going to the Greater

MICHIGAN STATE FAIR

By Cousin Joe

HOW FAIRS GOT STARTED.

The other day I got curious about fairs, so I got reading about them. Fairs are pretty old. Princes and magistrates used to encourage Fairs in Europe so people could trade goods at them. Boothybrook Fair was started by King John in 1204. The first agricultural fair in this country was started by Elkanah Watson, of Albany, New York, in 1819. The Michigan State Fair was founded in 1849 at Detroit. It moved later to Adrian, then to Lansing, and then back to Detroit again. Its primary purpose is educational. You can learn a lot at the State Fair. You can get a picture of what the farmers of the state are accomplishing and a lot of new ideas and inspiration for the coming year. That's why I'm going to it in September.

PROGRESS OF THE GREATER MICHIGAN STATE FAIR

The Agricultural Fair is the predominant type of Fair in this country. The Greater Michigan State Fair is primarily a Farmer's Fair but it is of equal interest to the city man. Every citizen of Michigan who has pride in his own state should know something about its agricultural prosperity, its rich natural resources, and vast future possibilities. The thousands who attend the Fair in September will learn a great deal about their state as well as enjoy a real good time.

Philosophical Thought

Life is like a game of whist. I don't enjoy the game much; but I like to play my cards well, and see what will be the end of it.—George Eliot.

SPARKS CIRCUS TO BE IN PETOSKEY

Afternoon and Evening Shows on Monday, August 23

Monday, August 23, afternoon and evenlag under huge masses of canvas, the finest circus every made by the ingenuity and courage of men, will parade and show in Petoskey to make the young folks happy and the old folks young. The great parade is on Monday morning at 11 o'clock. First of all, a real wild animal circus is a 1926 acquisition, having been imported from the world's greatest wild animal training quarters at Stellinghnm, Germany. Included in these displays will be found lions, tigers, leopards, polar and grizzly bears—even trained ostriches will be seen in addition to the Sparks' group of sixteen "Rotation" horses, the two elephant herds, fancy gaited and posing horses, the Bibb County Pig Circus, Sparks' Seals, and hosts of others of a novel nature. The circus proper opens with an elnborately staged spectncle, "L'Ora, the Jungle Queen," in which all of the animals, performers, premier dancers, and a large chorus participate. As a fitting finish to the all feature performance, the mammoth pageant, "The Flag of America" will be presented, in which 800 people and 500 horses appear. Sparks' Circus has been tripled in size this season and is today one of the largest in the world. Excursions on all railroads. Don't forget the date, Monday, August 23, at Petoskey, Mich.

CONCRETE ROADS MOST FAVORED

around Spring Lake was started under the Covert Act, against considerable opposition. At first it was possible to lay but a short stretch of concrete, with the hope that the work could be carried on at such intervnls as property owners were won over by the tangible profit and benfit to be obtained. Before the short section was finished, the contractor was notified that petitions were rendy for him to proceed with first, 3½ miles more than originally planned and then later another three-quarters of a mile. This has been continued until the free will of owners has completed the 12-mile drive around Spring Lake in eighteen months.

Other similar experiences under the Covert Act have demonstrated its value where its authority has been made use of.

Upon the presentation of these facts—and many figures bearing on the subject, the sentiment of the meeting became overwhelmingly in favor of obtnining a concrete report on costs and benefits; and should this information prove as favorable as now appears, n vigorous campaign is to be launched for beginnings on the road from the three cities, Charlevoix, East Jordan nnd Boyne City. Mr. Parker, president, and Mr. McCutcheon, secretary of the Boyne City Chamber of Commerce, speaking for their organization promised whole-hearted support to the committee and the campaign, when it is to be launched. Similar expressions came from representatives of Charlevoix and East Jordan.

Thereupon a committee was appointed. Naturally, Uncle George Van Pelt, at whose instance the meeting was called, and who has worked tirelessly for the good roads in Charlevoix county, was named chairman of the committee. The members are R. F. Sloan, Charlevoix, Sam Rogers, East Jordan and Frank Thompson, Boyne City.

The meeting was adjourned with the understanding that the committee would assemble on the call of the chairman. Tho chairman lronically remarked that the calls would be early and often.

French Tribunal Is Shown in Photoplay

Something of the spirit of the French revolution was felt by onlookers at the studios at St. Margarets, near Twickerham, London, when Herbert Wilcox, the well known British film producer, made the tribunal scenes in the screen version of "The Only Way," with Sir John Martin Harvey in his original stage role of Sidney Cartnn.

"The Only Way" is based on the celebrated Dickens' novel "A Tale of Two Cities" and comes to the Majestic Theatre next Tuesday and Wednesday under a United Artists corporation release.

The singing of loved hymns and the telling of the story will fill a happy hour for those who come.

RAILROAD MANAGEMENT

Despite the efforts of some radical politicians who are constantly endeavoring to find solutions for transportation ailments through political nostrums instead of through economic correctives, the railronds are managing to conduct themselves without much embarrassment from the political quacks. A few decades ago every politician seemed to have some political suggestion for handling railronds. A few of these had merit. In fact, there was a time when some railroads needed to be forced into changes of direction. But of late years the roads have realized their responsibilities and their duties to the people and, generally speaking, have conducted themselves properly.

The past five years have demonstrated that the rail lines are managed with consummate skill and business ability. The records show that we have the most satisfactory transportation service the country has ever known. And this was accomplished in the face of handicaps which at some seasons were serious.

Transportation is an economic rather than a political problem and it will be able to solve all of its problems only when the politicians quit harassing them with new and frenk schemes which recognize no economic laws. The roads should be allowed to devote all their time and energy to the conduct of their business instead of being confronted with political problems which should have no place in railroading.

Michigan is now at the height of the tourist season, a time when thousands of visitors are spending their vacation days among the splendors of our scenic wonders. We have invited this great army to visit us. We have asked them to come here to renew their youth and fortify themselves against the other months of the year when they have turned back to the grind of everydny life.

Michigan wants them to come again, to know that this is a state where our welcome is real and where they will feel that an annual visit is worth while. We cannot hope to accomplish this if we do not treat them as a stranger has a right to be treated. From isolated sections of the state come complaints that the tourist is being charged exhorbitant prices, that he is being gouged to the last penny. This is mighty poor practice and should be frowned upon by every community. When we overcharge the tourist we are killing the goose that wants to lay for us the golden egg. If we want to make Michigan great as a summer resort state, the first thing we have got to learn is to TREAT THE TOURIST RIGHT.

WHAT REALLY COUNTS

It is not the critic who counts; not the man who points out how the strong man stumbles, or where the doer of deeds could have done better. The credit belongs to the man who is actually in the arena, whose face is marred hy dust and sweat and blood; who strives valiantly, who errs and comes again and again, because there is no effort without shortcoming and error but who actually strives to do the deeds; who knows the grent enthusiasm, the great devotion, who spends himself in a worthy cause, who at best knows in the triumph of high achievement, and who nt the worst, if he fnils, at least fails while daring grently; so that his place will never be with those cold nnd timid souls who know neither victory or defent.—Theodore Roosevelt.

TAXES

Those persons who find that they have to pay more taxes, due to a higher assessment, on property they rent to tenants will naturally increase rents as a rule, although some do not. The taxes are generally passed along to the renter of the property, that is, the owner tries to get a certain percentage for his investment in a property. The Federal government was, of course, in a position to lower taxes, for the Federal government bore the expenses of the war, and with the war ended, the expenditures were lighter. But even so, the increase in the cost of state and local government throughout the country seems unwarranted. Between taxpaying seasons of the year is n good time to study this perplexing problem.

CARELESSNESS

A "Careful Crossing" campaign is being conducted by the railronds of the United States. This great effort to preserve human life should have the support of the entire public. Investigators have repeatedly pointed out that practically every grade crossing accident was the result of carelessness. Carelessness of the people is a factor to be abated by none save themselves. That explains why trespasser casualties have decreased but little, while there has been a varying increase in crossing accidents, amounting last year to 21 per cent. The railroads, it would appear, are doing their utmost to conserve human life and limb, but the great public, careless and heedless is not co-operating in the safety policy as it should and might.

NEW BARRACKS FOR TROOPERS

Upper peninsula troopers of the Michignn State Police will have better quarters in the future. Ground has been broken for a new barracks at Marquette, near the prison, which will supplant the old barracks at Negaunee. In case of trouble in the prison, as baa happened before, the troopers will he close nl hand. A two-story stucco building is being erected with garage. Capt. Arch. N. Downing will have his beadquarters there.

Citizens of Newberry donated the materials for a small post building there and the troopers did most of the work of putting it up. Formerly the men stationed tbere lived in rented rooms.

A new post bas alsc heen establishrd near Iron Mountain.

Cleghorn Gets Badge

As testimony of their regard for his ability and handling of duties as acting police chief for several weeks, the city council of Hamtramck recently presented Lieut. John C. Cleghorn, commander of the St. Clair detachment of the Michigan State Police, with a gold and platinum badge, inscribed "Commissioner of Public Safety." On the back of the badge is an inscription showing the appreciation of the city of Hamtramck for his services from March 9 to April 26. Lieut. Cleghorn was in complete charge at that time of the police department of the city, having been commissioned by the governor to take charge when local officials were unable to preserve order, following a shooting scrape within the ranks of the city department and apparent complete demoralization of its control.

Why I'm going to the Greater
MICHIGAN STATE FAIR

COMPETING FOR A REAL PRIZE!

Effie Martin and Minnie Kirk 's been running a neck and neck race for young Bill Carter, the catch of Lapeer County. Effie expects to win out on her lemon meringue pies and Minnie's depending on her cocoanut cream cake. Last night they were both at our house together and I says: "Girls, going to the State Fair? I hear you can learn something new down there about baking in September. And young Bill Carter was telling me he's getting mighty tired of lemon pie and cream cake. Seems to me you ought to brush up a bit!" So I made two customers for the Fair right there.

AUTO THEIVES ARRESTED HERE

TRIO OF LANSING BOYS IN JAIL AFTER SERIES OF THEFTS

Stole Cars at Lansing, Trufant, Greenville, and Charlevoix — Raid Resort at Bellaire

Lnwson Brown, Albert Fabino and Ray Boyland, all giving their address as Lansing, were arrested by Sheriff Charles Novak, Tuesday afternoon, on Bridge street. The boys are now lodged in the county jail after a series of auto thefts which resulted in their arrest here.

Starting in at Lansing last week, the trio stole a Ford sedan, which they drove to Trufant and abandoned. At n home-coming in Trufant they stole a Buick coach and started on their trip north. The next appearance the thieves made was at Bellaire where they stole 3 fish poles, a couple of bathing suits, a gold watch and chain valued at $200, also 3 pairs of high-top boots, and finally a Ford sedan, which they drove north of town and started stripping. They were frightened from this job when a woman passed in a car and only got away with a tire and rim, robes, tools, etc. The woman reported what she had seen to Sheriff Kittle of Bellaire and it was upon his information that they were arrested here.

After their arrest it developed that they were the parties who stole Hiram Cody's Buick sedan from Bridge street and were in the act of stripping the car in the woods near the cement plant when discovered by Deputy Charles Marshall. They took the tools and a robe from this car and escaped into the woods. The young car bandits were making their way up the state by stripping cars and selling the stolen goods wherever possible along the way. They intended to strip Cody's Buick, pile the stuff into the car taken at Trufant and then make their wny south again.

Other warrants are out for the young auto thieves from Greenville, where they stole a Chrysler cnr and another from Lansing where they stole a Ford sedan. They are being held for Lnnsing officers.

HENNESSEY WON SINGLES CROWN

DEFEATED FORMER CHAMP IN STRAIGHT SETS, 10-8, 6-1, 6-2

Women's Singles Won by Mrs. Reis —Junior Singles by Clark C. Smith

John Hennessey of Indianapolis, No. 7 man in the 1924 national rankings, won the men's singles championship of the Western Michigan tennis championships, played last week on the clay courts of The Inn, by defeating George O'Connell of Chicago, former champion, in straight sets, 10-8, 6-1, 6-2.

Hennessey's powerful all around game was too fast for the former champion, who in the early part of the game put everything he had into the fight. O'Connell led 5-3 in the first set and took advantage in games twice before bowing to the powerful stroke of the Indianapolis man. The 18 games in the first set were a match in themselves, both players resorting to every trick of the game to win. Hennessey allowed but three games in the last two sets and had the former champion completely outclassed. O'Connell's game in the finals lacked the sensational plays of former matches in which he showed real tennis class, and proved himself the most spectacular player in the tournament.

The women's singles championship was won by Mrs. Ruth Riese of Saginaw, state champion, who defeated Marion Pearson of Detroit, last year's western Michigan champion, in straight sets, 6-4, 6-1.

The new champion was in unbeatable form, erring but occasionally and passing Miss Pearson, who advanced with drives to the corners of the court that fell far out of reach. The former champion, after taking the first two games in the opening set and again leading at 3-1, completely outshadowed her opponent and her stride looked like the beginning of another victory, but from then on the champion was master of most plays and her cross court and deep volley shots kept Miss Pearson away from the net, where she accurately placed nearly every ball that touched her racquet.

Clarke C. Smith of St. Louis, seeded No. 2 in the junior event, won the junior title by defeating Rayner Field of Jackson, in three short sets, 6-2, 6-0, 6-2. Smith, who eliminated Thwaites in the men's singles, possesses a wonderful forehand and backhand drive, combining it with a pretty exhibition of headwork. The loser, one time state boys' champion, though playing a game very much like the champion, lacked steadiness and frequently erred on his background strokes. The junior champion has one of the most powerful overhead smashes of any of the players in either the men's or junior events.

Mrs. Curt Tree and Helen Cansfield of Detroit won the women's doubles crown by defeating Marion Pearson of Detroit and Mary Snider of Ann Arbor in two sets, 6-2, 7-5.

The men's doubles championship wns won by John Hennessey, of Indianapolis and Jack Harris of Chicago, who defeated Paul and Ray Kunkel of Cincinnati, in straight sets, 6-0, 6-0, 6-4.

The tournament which closed Sunday, was one of the most successful ever held in the state. Charlevoix can justly boast of the large entry list, which ran well over the hundred mark, and in spite of inclement weather the first of the week, the matches were run off and completed in schedule time. Much credit is due H. A. Cartier, tournament chairman, who done all in his power to make the tournament the success it was, also to W. Gordon Parker and Lawrence Chase, secretary and clerk, respectively, who were on the job at all times. Parker devoted the whole week to the management of the tournament and the tournament committee is deeply in debt to Ted Joslyn of Grand Rapids, whose former experience in handling tournaments was freely given and appreciated. We will also give due credit to C. Y. Marshall, who worked day and night to keep the courts in tournament trim. The tennis club also extends their thanks to A. I. Creamer, manager of The Inn, for his splendid co-operation and generous help.

It is the hope of the local tennis club to make the western Michigan championships an annual affair at Charlevoix, and with their success in handling the one just closed to their credit, they should be sucessful in their efforts to land the event each year.

WORKINGMEN RALLY TO HIS SUPPORT

Realize Hinkley Will Give Them a Square Deal

Dana H. Hinkley, Emmet county manufacturer and newspaperman, was in the city this week in the interests of his candidacy for the Republican nomination at the September 14th primaries for the state senatorship of this district.

One of the marked assets of Hinkley's candidacy is the loyal support he is receiving from former employees. Workmen who have been on the Hinkley payroll are rallying to his support, asserting that labor interests will receive a 'square deal if he is sent to Lansing. They also point out the fact that he was one of the lawmakers in the Michigan lower house who passed and made possible the workingmen's compensation act.

REALTORS MEET IN CONFERENCE

CO-OPERATION AMONG MEMBERS IS URGED

Meeting Addressed by John H. Doelle, Executive Secretary of Association

At a meeting in the offices of Kinsey & Buys, Charlevoix, held last Friday evening, representative real estate men from Antrim, Charlevoix and Emmet counties voted to establish a local real estate board which is to be affiliated with the Michigan Real Estate association and the National Real Estate bonrd.

The meeting was addressed by John H. Doelle, of Lansing, executive secretary of the Michigan Real Estate association. He told of the premiership of this section as a resort and tourist playground, and of how the outside world favors it as such. Later, at the request of the meeting he explained proceedure for obtaining the national and state affiliations desired, and assisted in preparing the details.

Committees were appointed and a date was set for another meeting to be held in the same place, two weeks hence. Committees will then report and preliminary details be completed.

Chase of Charlevoix; from Emmet county came John Quinlan of Petoskey and George W. Gould and E. C. Matthews of. Harbor Springs.

SCHOOL BOARD TO SUBMIT PLANS

FOR NEW SCHOOL BUILDING AT FUTURE MEETING

Engage Services of Warren Holmes-Powers Co., Architects, of Lansing, Michigan

The Board of Education at its last meeting completed another step in its plans to secure better school facilities for Charlevoix when it selected from a number of architects the firm of Warren Holmes-Powers company of Lansing, specialists in school planning, to draw the plans and write the specifications for the proposed building.

The Warren Holmes-Powers company has studied the school building problem to the extent that it has worked out economical methods of construction, convenient and workable room arrangements to a remarkable degree. It builds buildings that not only fit the school and contribute to the education of the children but lends itself to community service.

The firm has planned some of the finest buildings in Michigan as well as in other states, and has now a large number under construction. It has recently completed the National Kindergarten and Elementary College in Evanston, Illinois, which is unequaled as one of the finest architectural efforts in the country. The firm planned and is now building the Lincoln consolidated school near Ypsilanti, a $300,000.00 grade and high school that is receiving an unusual share of favorable comment. In addition to a large number of schools that the Warren Holmes-Powers company has already built in the state, it is now building schools at Alma, Albion, Milan, Chelsea, Clinton, Wayne, New Britain, Connecticut and East Orange, New Jersey.

Messrs. Craig and Nordrum of the Board of Education, and Superintendent Coverdale, visited two schools at Alpena planned by the Warren Holmes-Powers company as well as the Lincoln consolidated school at Ypsilanti, and were thoroughly convinced of the desirability of employing a firm that has so carefully worked out the details of school planning.

A favorable response to the efforts of the Board of Education and the friends of improved school facilities for Charlevoix will assure for us the finest school structure in northern Michigan.

Sankey is manager of the paddock, and the program includes children's fancy dress costume ride, two classes for saddle horses, boys' fancy costume ride, pcg sticking race for boys and girls, egg and spoon race, ladies' saddle tandem, ribbon race, potato race and musical ride.

IRONTON CHURCH HAS ARRIVED

ANNUAL FESTIVAL WAS GREAT SUCCESS

Costuming and Make-up Excellent and Parts Well Taken—Net Over $300.00

"The Ironton church has arrived" was the way one of our friends put it after the great success of the annual festival held last Wednesday.

A chicken dinner may not be an exciting story but the one served at Ironton was so immensely satisfying that people continued talking about it long after they could eat no more. And the throngs were there. For an hour or two the corner of a little side country road was in great need of a traffic cop. No wonder that customers at Joe Mosher's store could find no eggs for three days after the big chicken dinner.

The church was decorated with greens and festoonery and attractive signs, the artistic work of Miss Eva Adams, proclaimed the various wares of the tastefully adorned booths. Articles of rare workmanship and beauty brought ready buyers so that the sales of the fancy work booth nearly reached a hundred dollars. Of course the candy booth sold out every crumb and the ice cream vendors in the attractive newly finished basement rooms of the church did a big business and were the last to close after all the program was over.

The home talent play made a big

Proposed Handsome School Building for Charlevoix

To Charlevoix Voters:

Repeated requests have come to the Board of Education to plan for the erection of a modern high school building to meet the needs of our boys and girls.

Charlevoix has not been slow to improve streets, to build beautiful homes, to provide water and lighting facilities and to make the most of the natural resources that attract visitors from the world over, but its school buildings have not kept pace with other improvements. All our buildings lack modern equipment and our high school is overcrowded.

The board has studied the question for some time and from all angles. It has acquainted itself with school building progress in neighboring cities. It has consulted architects and obtained estimates of cost both for remodeling the old buildings and erecting new ones. As a result of this study, it is unanimous in recommending the erection of a modern junior and senior high school building that will cost $200,000 to build and equip.

The proposed building will take care of all grades above the sixth. It will contain necessary class rooms, office, study halls and library. Also a combination gymnasium and auditorium with stage and adjoining rooms well equipped with showers and lockers.

The building program also contemplates the remodelling at some future time of the two old brick buildings into modern school rooms for grade purposes, at an additional expense of $50,000.

The board recommends that the bonds be retired over a period of thirty years, which on the present valuation means that taxes will be increased for both principal and interest about $3.25 per thousand dollars. Increased operating expenses will perhaps be $1.75 per thousand dollars more. The present school tax rate is $12.00, making a total of $17.00 per thousand. These estimates are based on the sale of the bonds at 4½ per cent, retired over a period of thirty years and spread over an assessed valuation of $3,600,000.00.

By comparison with the present school tax rate in the following towns it can readily be seen that the proposed building will not make our school taxes excessive:

Traverse City	$16.21
Cadillac	16.41
Big Rapids	18.36
Petoskey	14.31
Cheboygan	15.50
Ludington	16.01
Boyne City	28.01
Escanaba	17.00
East Jordan	24.00
Harbor Springs	??

Good schools are the community's most important asset and the Board of Education solicits constructive suggestion from interested citizens.

At a special meeting of the district to be held on Monday, August 30th, at 7:30 p. m. in the high school building, the qualified voters, who also must be tax payers, are invited to participate in the opportunity to discuss the proposal and to register their decision. Polls open from 8:30 p. m. until 10:30 p. m. central standard time.

Youra very truly,
BOARD OF EDUCATION.

H. A. Craig, Secretary.
Oluf Nordrum, Treasurer.

Much credit is due, Gerald Hollingsworth, chairman of the regatta committee, for the efficient manner in which he handled the races.

The Miss Charlevoix showed real speed in her run Sunday and showed the spectators that she could "get out and go." Mr. Brady will race against time in an exhibition run at the Elk Rapids regatta on Friday of this week.

We understand that the regatta just held will be an annual affair from now on, and that a perpetual trophy will be put up for next year's regatta.

BOHN PLEASED WITH LOCAL RECEPTION

Confident of Winning Out in September Primaries

Dr. Frank P. Bohn of Newberry, candidate for congress in the 11th congressional district, was in Charlevoix on Friday last and left for home well pleased with the reception he rectived here and optimistic as to his chances in the September primaries.

There is nothing formal about his local campaigning. Escorted by friends he made the rounds and met many voters in the down-town district, and as he expressed it, "letting them see what kind of a fellow I am."

During his southern trip he visited several other parts of the district below the straits and says he will receive greater support than anticipated.

The Oldham club was filled to capacity on Sunday evening, August 15h, when Miss Helen Morris, a young concert pianist, assisted by Mary Jane Doherty, danseuse, appeared in recital.

Miss Morris opened the program with the lovely Fantasie in C Minor of Mozart, played with simple charm and fine tonal effects. This was followed by the Gluck-Saint Saens Caprice given in the sparkling and dainty manner characteristic of the music of that period. The first group ended with a brilliant, dashing performance of the Dohynain Rhapsody, the Chopin numbers were played poetically and with exquisite taste.

The program closed with the Caprice Espagnole of Mozkowski, aa extremely beautiful Prelude of Rachmaninoff played with fluent technic and musical understanding. Miss Morris' performance of Lizt'a 12th Rhapsody gave evidence of much feeling, color and very adequate technical abillty, aad her playing well merited the enthusiastic reception which she received.

Mary Jane Doherty appeared in two dances, a toe dance and Amtra's dance, with grace and artistry, winniag much approval from her auditors.

Mr. and Mrs. Rogers Will Make Their Home in Saginaw

Announcements were received by Charlevoix friends this week of the marriage of Miss Kathryn Geer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Geer, former residents of this city now residing at Plainwell, Mich., to Mr. Norman W. Rogers of Saginaw, on Saturday, August 14th.

The ceremony, which was performed at the bride's home, by Rev. Naylor, pastor of the Methodist church of Plainwell, and former Charlevoix pastor, was quiet and simple and was attended by immediate relatives of the bride and groom.

Mrs. Rogers is very well known here and has a large number of friends in this city. She is a graduate of the local high school and has been teaching for the past two years at Saginaw, where the happy young couple will make their future home. Charlevoix friends extend their congratulations.

There will be a basket picnic at Maple Grove Grange on Saturday, August 28. Program in the afternoon and dance in the evening.—Adv. 33t2

BAD CHECK PASSER LANDED IN JAIL

Had Been Found Guilty of Stealing Auto in Gloucester, Mass.

Fred Brown, alias Fred Souza and William Randolph Scharton, was arrested here Monday night by Sheriff Charles Novak and is being held in the county jail charged with forgery of a $50 check on the State Bank at Petoskey, and another for $65 on a Petoskey clothing firm.

A letter received by Sheriff Novak from Millard J. Whidden, city marshal of Gloucester, Mass., states that Brown broke into a garage there a few weeks ago and stole a large touring car which he was in the act of repainting when found and arrested. He was brought into court there and found guilty and was being held for the grand jury under $1,500.00 bond, which he furnished through a bondsman and was released. He was described by Whidden as a bad character.

It is alleged Brown was posing as a lawyer around here and in Bellaire and formed the acquaintance of attorneys hereabouts. In the lawyer role he used the name of William Randolph Scharton, and passed out his cards which it is alleged were printed in Grayling. His case is awaiting disposition.

STANDARD TO BUILD YACHT FILLING PIER

To be Located Near Their Tanks on Lake Charlevoix

Announcement has been made by Claire Webster, local agent for the Standard Oil company, that the company expects to build a pier and pumping station on the shores of Lake Charlevoix, just below the present storage tanks, for the convenience of visiting yachting parties.

A 17,000 gallon storage tank will be installed, which gives the local station the largest storage capacity of any station north of Muskegon. Tanks for kerosene, gasoline and furnace oil, will have a combined storage capacity of around 160,000 gallons.

CONCRETE WALL TO KEEP AUTO RACERS ON THE FAIR TRACK

Sanctioned American Automobile Association Meeting Ensures New Safety for Spectators.

So that spectators may be fully protected during the automobile races which will feature September 11, the final day of the Michigan State Fair, a solid concrete retaining wall will be constructed around the centerfield in which automobiles will be parked and spectators permitted to watch the event.

For the first time in years automobile races sanctioned by the American Automobile Association, the governing body of racing in this country, will be held at the state fair.

Special emphasis is being laid on living up to all the rules of the Contest Board of the A. A. A. These rules provide that a hub-high rail must be around the centerfield provided spectators are permitted within the enclosure. They also require that another fence forty feet inside the hub-high rail must be around the centerfield provided spectators are permitted within the enclosure. They also require that another fence forty feet inside the hub-high rail be constructed and that no one be permitted between the rail and the fence.

Construction on the inner fence is progressing. A temporary outer railing made of six by sixes and backed with four by fours has been constructed for the automobile races which were held under the A. A. A. sanction at the State Fair Grounds on June 27. This rail was hastily constructed in order to conform with the rules of the Contest Board, because time did not permit the construction of a concrete rail by the day of the race. The two months intervening between this race and the opening of the fair will permit the construction of a rail which will be there for all time.

STATE MOVES FAST TO FINISH NEW BUILDING AT FAIR

Construction of the Agricultural Building at the State Fair Grounds in Detroit is progressing rapidly, and the new building will be ready for occupancy for the Michigan State Fair which will be held from September 5 to September 11.

Practically all of the steel work will be in place by July, as well as a large portion of the brick masonry with which the lower portion of the building will be finished. A force of seventy-five workmen are busily engaged in the construction of this new building ,which will house the agricultural exhibits of Michigan at the forthcoming State Fair and at future fairs.

The new Agricultural Building is located between the Coliseum and the Dairy Building. Its type of architecture is very similar to that of the two structures on either side, with an arcade between the Dairy Building and the Agricultural Building which will permit visitors at the Fair to pass from one building to the other. In these three buildings will thus be conveniently centered the agricultural interests of the state.

In previous years the farmers of the state have not been given the prominent part in the State Fair which is considered necessary for the complete success of this annual event. Other states have found that a good agricultural display means a successful fair, and under the new management of the State Fair Board, Michigan is to take her rightful place.

MANY GUESTS ATTEND BELVEDERE MASQUERADE

Casino Was Prettily Decorated With Balloons and Evergreens

The masquerade dancing party held last Thursday evening at the Belvedere casino under the direction of Miss Susanne Macey, social hostess at the hotel, was a decided success in every way.

One of the interesting features on the program were the poses made by twelve girls, summer guests at the Belvedere Club, representing various magazine covers. The costumes were dainty and original and won the hearty applause of the audience. This feature was followed by several solos, pleasingly rendered by Mr. Paul Hyde Davies, of Muskogee, Oklahoma, and then the grand march, led by Mrs. Ira Holden and Mr. Crouse, with over one hundred people in costume.

About 350 guests were present at the casino, which was very prettily decorated with balloons and evergreens. The party was a very pleasant affair.

W. C. T. U. MEET AT BOYNE CITY

COMMITTEES REPORT MUCH WORK ACCOMPLISHED

President of Lower Eleventh District Gives Pointers on Coming Primary Election

The W. C. T. U. county meeting held at Boyne City, Friday, August 6th, was opened by singing led by Miss Nettie Correll. The report of work done in the Unions in the county included the organization of National Prohibitinn Guards in Sunday schools with each class a company. Conducted prize essay contest, also one silver medal contest. Held a community hanquet with Judge Gilbert ns speaker, on "Law Enforcement." Held a "victory" meeting with the pastors as speakers, and posted cigarette laws, and secured blotters for schools and hotels.

A short memorial service was held in hehalf of Mrs. Isora Correll, Mrs. F. J. Weikel and Mrs. Jennie Alcox, who have changed their White Ribbons for white robes.

Mrs. Lockhoff of Maneelona, the president of the lower eleventh district was in attendance and gave a short talk, including some pointers on the primary election to be held September 14.

The following proposed amendments to the state constitution were read in a paper by Mrs. E. E. Cross:

"Four proposed amendments to the state constitution, changing three articles of the Michigan hasic law, are to he presented to voters in November. Only one amendment, that increasing pay of legislators from $800 a session to $1,200, is expected to he of major puhlic interest.

"The proposal to raise the compensation of members of the law making hody was put up to the people at the 1925 session after members of hoth houses had voiced opposition to "raising their own pay." The amendment also provides that compensation for extra session be increased from $5 to $10 a day.

"On three occasions since 1917 the voters have refused to approve proposals to increase salaries of state officials and for that reason the amendment to be voted on in November is regarded doubtful of passage. The other amendments to he voted on are:

Change of Sheriff Law

"I. A proposal to allow sheriffs to hold office more than two consecutive terms of two years. This restriction formerly applied to certain other county officials and was removed. The reason it was inserted in the constitution originally, according to records, was to insure a 'housecleaning' every four years—in other words to hring to light any corruption which might have remainced unexposed if the same office holder were re-elected. Proponents of the amendment to remove the restriction contended, however, that the precaution is unnecessary and that in many instances it prevents retention of a valuahle officer.

"2. A proposal to allow two or more municipalities to unite in forming 'metropolitan districts' for the purpose of issuing honds and establishing puhlic utilities. This is intended primarily to permit suburbs to join the city of Detroit in water and sewage disposal and transportation projects. The amendment specifies, however, that the voters concerned must approve any such merger.

"3. Provision for allowing municipalities to condemn more land than is necessary for establishing public improvements. It is intended by this enactment to allow cities to profit when property values are increased by reason of puhlic improvements. If the amendment passes, a city can purehase an entire lot when only a narrow strip on one side is needed for street widening or paving purposes. The remainder of the lot could then be sold, possibly for more than it cost the city originally."

The county work will he carried on through the year by a committee consisting of the presidents of the three unions with the secretary-treasurer.

A co-operative supper at five o'elock was enjoyed by the delegates and friends of the Unions. Rev. Peatling of the M. E. church was the speaker of the evening. Mrs. Scott and Mrs. Brown pleased the audience with their readings and four young ladies also gave interesting numbers. The meeting closed hy all singing "God Be With You Till We Meet Agnin."

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

Entitled

Christian Science: The Eternal Law of Love

by

John J. Flinn, C. S. B. of Evanston, Illinois

Member of the Board of Lectureship of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist in Boston, Mass.

The lecturer was introducod by Mr. H. K. Allen who said:

In the Bible, book of Acts, we are told that Peter prayed to help others to know God:

It is easy for a Christian Scientist to helieve this as when one has learned through the study of Christion Seience to better know God, a desire comes to share with others this knowledge.

The Christian Science hoard of lectureship has provided a corps of lecturers who are qualified to present to the public the truths about Christian Scienee and we are to have the privilege today of listening to one of these lecturers.

I take pleasure in introducing to you, Mr. John J. Flinn, of Evanston, Illinois, who is a member of the Board of Lectureship of the Mother Church, The First Church of Christ Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts.

Now as ever, perhaps now more than ever, is man's extremity God's opportunity. In affirmation of the many assurances which revealed religion has held out, and still holds out, to the douhting and disturhed, Mary Baker Eddy strikes the very highest note of positive faith when she declares in our textbook, "Science and Health, with Key to the Scriptures," that "divine Love always has met and always will meet every human need" (Science and Health, p. 494). This crystallized epitome of her entire philosophy embodies the greatest fact discoverable in ancient or in modern theology. Into twelve words is here condensed all that is revealed in the Old and New Testaments; all that is preached, promised, and taught hy God's prophets, by Christ Jesus, hy the disciples and the apostles of the Master, hy all the spiritually-inspired men and women of all the ages. Those of us who have long studied and practiced Christian Science, who have time and again benefited hy its teachings and demonstrated its truths, are so convinced of its efficacy as to hold, without limitation or reservation, that every question of human concern, in the settlement of which parliaments, congresses, conventions, and conferences have signally, conspicuously, and sadly failed, can be solved by the scientific application of spiritual law, the eternal law of Love.

THE ALL-SUFFICIENCY OF GOD

It has always been, and is to-day, a professed fundamental of monotheistic religious creeds, sects, and denominations that there is but one God and that He is omnipresent, omniscient, and omnipotent—all-presence, all-intelligence, all-power. It is basio to Jewish and Christian theology alike that God is the primal and governing Cause; that He, and He alone, holds in hand the destinies of men, of peoples, and of nations; that with Him and in Him rests the definite and final settlement of every question that affects the welfare of humanity; that His wisdom is sufficiently ample, His power sufficiently far-reaching, and His love sufficiently broad and deep to meet every demand that may be made upon Him looking to the protection, comfort, and happiness of his obedient children. While holding to all this, or theoretically holding to all this, those of every faith, ancient and modern, speaking generally, with the single exception of Christian Science, stop short at mere belief in or assertion of these truths and go outside of God for help when faced hy difficulty or threatened with anger. Relying as it does upon His allness, no one can reasonably question the logic of the Christian Science position that God'a children require no other help than He is ahle and willing to render them at all times and in all their difficulties and trouhles.

AN INVARIABLE FAITH

Christian Science casts aside the theoretical and adopts and clings steadfastly to the practical and the proved in its entire attitude toward the omnipreaence, omniscience, and omnipotence of God. It finds no place and no excuse for modifications, exceptions, or compromises in its estimate of God'a infinite nature; it accepts Him without limitation; it takes Him at His word; and it has proved and is proving, through this attitude toward the creator, and through the understanding and demonstration which accompany it, that His boundless love not only can hut actually does meet every human need, when faithfully sought, scientifically found, and unconditionally accepted.

12-IN. BASS LAW BEING PROBED

INVESTIGATION UNDER WAY BY CONSERVATION OFFICIALS

Beneficial Information Should Result and Measures to Remedy Conditions Follow

T. H. Lingloin and T. Metzlaar, foremost biological, experts of the state department of conservation and other officials of the department, have been spending the past week in Charlevoix, East Jordan and Boyne City investigating the bass situation in Lake Charlevoix.

Since early in the spring when the 12-inch bass law went into effect, efforts have been made by sportsmen throughout the county and especially from Boyne City, to have this law repealed, setting forth the fact that the percentage of 12-inch bass in Lake Charlevoix was very small, and to observe the law faithfully, fishermen would have to throw back a large number of bass which had been injured when hooked nnd would likely die after being returned to the water. A petition was circulated in different cities in the county and over 600 names obtained as a protest against the ruling. Appeals were made to the conservation department which have finally resulted in the investigation now being carried on.

Messrs. Lingloin and Metzlaar have been furnished with a hydrogrnphic map of Lake Charlevoix and are conducting a thorough survey of conditions in the lake. One important object of their investigation is to determine whether the 8 or 9-inch bass spawns. In case they don't, and the law allowed fishermen to catch nnd keep them, the result can be plainly seen. They would never have a chance to spawn and natural propagation of bass would almost come to a standstill. Test nets hnve been set across the channel and near the Inn bathing pavilion, but the number of fish obtained has been very small, only 13 being taken from both nets. Other sets have been made at Ironton and Horton Bay and the results of the investigation are being watched with considerable interest by sportsmen of the county. So far the 12-inch bass has been greatly out-numbered by the smaller ones, showing, we believe, that the conditions set forth by local sportsmen are true. Nevertheless, an investigation of this nature cannot help but bring beneficial results. Feed conditions are being investigated, which according to local fishermen, is one of the contributory causes of poor steelhead fishing the past two years. Measures to remedy this shortage will follow the investigation by state officials.

CAMPBELL OUT TO BOOST ALL NORTH MICHIGAN

Indian River Man, Resident of Region for 48 Years, Believes State Should Take Immediate Steps in Development of Michigan Playgrounds.

If the people of this great straits region approve of the development of its natural resources, of the expansion of its advantages, and the progressive laws and legislation which will tend toward this, then they will approve the candidacy of "Cal" Campbell of Indian River, who is seeking the Republican nomination as state senator from this district.

A thorough believer in the possibilities of this section of the state, Cal Campbell has been a foremost worker toward its development. For years and years, while operating his stone quarry at Afton, near Indian River, Cal Campbell has identified himself with every progressive move to better conditions in this great region.

A staunch republican, a leader of the party in Northern Michigan, Mr. Campbell comes before the voters not by his own choice, but at the urgent solicitation of friends throughout the entire district.

In going into this campaign Mr. Campbell did not jump into it. Rather he was slow to agree to make the race. He had no political ambitions. Although a leader in the party, he has never asked favors. He has not even sought public office of any kind.

But Cal Campbell is true to Northern Michigan. He is true to his friends, and his desires to see this great section of Michigan, develop into the world's greatest playground.

This cannot be accomplished in a few months, it takes years and years of hard work. It takes state aid and state preparations. Roads must be constructed and new territory opened up. In this the state should take an active and immediate interest.

The great shoreline of Lake Michigan from Mackinaw City to Harbor Spring should be opened up at once by a state road.

The prosperity of this whole great straits region depends almost entirely upon the development of its summer resorts. The sooner the ronds are constructed along the lake shores, the quicker the tremendous development will start, and the quicker the development, the greater the prosperity, so Mr. Campbell believes, and not half heartedly either, that this great state of Michigan should start now to help develop Northern Michigan's Summer Resort lnnds.

For State Senator "Cal" Campbell of Indian River

Good roads mean progress, but new roads mean development and development means prosperity to every man, woman and child residing in this great region.

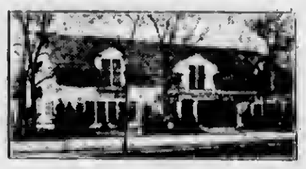
If the people of this region want to see the summer resort business expand to the point where prosperity is actually felt by everyone in the north, then they should not hesitate to vote for Cal Campbell for State Senator at the primaries, Sept. 14.

A vote for Cal Campbell is a vote for progress and the development of Northern Michigan's great summer lands. There are other reasons why you should vote for Cal Campbell for State Senator. These reasons will be announced in the columns of this paper each week. Watch for the next issue.—Adv. 33t1

Why I'm going to the Greater
MICHIGAN STATE FAIR

SPEAKING OF IMPROVEMENTS!

Glenn Pape's boy and Dave Cook's daughter got home from Albion and Olivet colleges this spring and are spending their summer vacation together. Last night they both came over to the house to hear me talk. "Going to the State Fair this year, Cousin Joe," asks the young man, "I hear there's all sorts of improvements." "Sure I'm going," I says, "and as for improvements there's the new Agricultoral Building, a lot of new exhibits, a big horse show and Ralph DePalma is going to be in the auto races. Bot speaking of improvements," I says with a wink to my wife, "seems to me one of the biggest improvements that could be made in this state would be to move those two colleges you yoong folks go to closer together!"



PROGRESS OF THE GREATER MICHIGAN STATE FAIR

The Boys' and Girls' Club Building houses the "Junior State Fair." This department has its own contests and prizes—is complete within itself. It is now one of the most popular features—and one of the most valuable from an educational standpoint—of the whole Fair. Above photo shows the splendid building the juniors will occupy this year.

WILL VOTE ON TWO AMENDMENTS

AT THE COMING NOVEMBER ELECTION

Legislators Ask for Increase in Pay and Change in Tenure of Sheriff's Office

Four proposed amendments to the state constitution, changing three articles of the Michigan basic law, are to be presented to voters in November. Only one amendment, that to increase pay of legislators from $800 a session to $1,200, is expected to be of major public interest.

The proposal to rnise the compensation of members of the law making body was put up to the people at the 1925 session after members of both houses had voiced opposition to "raising their own pny." The amendment also provides that compensation for extra sessions be increased from $5 to $10 a day.

On three occasions since 1917 the voters have refused to approve proposals to increase salaries of state officers and for that reason the amendment to be voted on is regarded doubtful of passage. The other amendments to be voted on are:

A proposal to allow sheriffs to hold office for more than two consecutive terms of two years. This restriction formerly applied to certain other county officers and was removed. The reason it was inserted in the constitution originally, according to records was to insure a housecleaning every four years, in other words to bring to light any corruption which might remain unexposed if the same office holder were re-elected. Proponents of the amendment to remove that restriction contend, however that the precaution is unnecessary and that in many instances it prevents retention of a valuable officer.

A proposal to allow two or more municipalities to unite in forming metropolitan districts for the purpose of issuing bonds and establishing public utilities. This is intended primarily to permit suburbs to join the city of Detroit in water, sewage disposal and transportation projects. The amendment specifies, however, that the voters concerned must approve any such merger.

Provisions for allowing municipalities to condemn more land than is necessary for establishing public improvements. It is intended by this enactment to allow cities to profit when property values are increased by reason of public improvements. If the amendment passes, a city can purchase an entire lot when only a narrow strip on one side is needed for street widening or paving purposes. The remainder of the lot could then be sold, possibly for more than it cost the city originally.

hit before an audience which filled all the space and every inch of standing room including the porch. Even then to our great regret many were turned away being unable to get within hearing or seeing distance.

The play was well adapted to the clever group of Ironton players, entitled "Al Martin's Country Store." It was a friendly comedy full of good humor and good acting.

The following is the character ensemble: Al Martin the storekeeper, Doan Ogden; Marie, his pretty daughter as postmistress, Kathryn Tumath; Sam Jones, Floyd King; Tom Briggs, Manetta Berry; Buck Friend, Ole Neilson; Rube Hitchins, Eliott Bird; were the various contributors to the country store philosophy. Ernest Brown and Elliott Bird took the parts of the city gentlemen engineers, Harold Hawley and Robert Corey. Eleanor Tumath and Edith Neilson were the up-to-date young ladies as friends of the heroine, Marie Martin. Mrs. Blake and Mrs. Smith in sun bonnets and aprons were well tnken by Mrs. Alexander and Mrs. King and their swapping of recipes brought much joy to the amused audience. Agnes Brown and Mabel Bird took the parts of the stylishly dressed ladies, Mrs. Hawkins and Mrs. Simmons. An irresistible bunch of kids were Hunter, Gus, Ned and Jerry, taken by Bessie Brown, James Patterson, Eleanor Tumath and Wallace Saunders. Si Newcomb was mannishly tnken by Zoe Patterson. Gail Allen made an excellent school teacher as Ralph Miller and Wilbur Brown was an honest-to-goodness Methodist minister, the Rev. John Wesley Asbury. The villain of the play, Otto Padrielli, an ilernnt music teacher was well carried out by Willard Bird. Vaughn Ogden as Squire Holden was the tightest skinflint of the neighborhood, but he could not get by the shrewd storekeeper. Foster Johnson, as the little excitable negro boy Jim and Mary Virginia Wilson as the irrepressible imp of a mischief lover, Mandy Spriggs, were a joy to the audience whenever they appeared.

The costuming and make-up were excellent and the parts well mastered. We hope for the day when we shall have a well organized troup known near and far as "The Ironton Players."

The play netted the handsome sum of over sixty dolinrs as the contribution of the young people toward the work of our Ironton church.

All in all the occasion of the annual festival exceeded all former records both in attendance and in the total amount of money realized, which was considerably over $300.00 net after all bills were paid.

At the church service Sunday the church received a generous personal contribution from the people of the Sequanota Club amounting to over $77.00.

Good will and good work and a fine friendly fellowship have characterized the whole undertaking, making this little rural church center of Christian influence which is sure to be felt far and wide in the days ahead and the years to come.

BARBERRY ERADICATION

Progress in Charlevoix County

To date the campaign directed by the United States Department of Agriculture to eradicate the Common Barberry bushes from Charlevoix county has completely covered Norwood and Marion townships, a portion of Charlevoix township and the city of Charlevoix. In covering this portion of the county three wild areas have been located totaling 738 wild bushes and 4,723 seedlings. Besides these 19 bushes have been located around country and city residences. In the destruction of these bushes salt has been used in practically every case. The total quantity of salt used so far in the county is slightly over seven tons. Salt is used in killing the Common Barberry bushes because it is the cheapest, safest and most convenient chemical that will efficiently serve this purpose. An application of ten pounds of salt per square foot applied around the base of a bush will soon kill the bush under ordinary conditions. In many cases in the wild areas the entire surface of the ground under the large bushes must be salted in order to kill a crop of seedlings that is present. Chemical treatment in preference to digging the Common Barberry bushes can not be overemphasized, because in the digging operation small fragments of the roots are almost sure to be left which will mean a new crop of common barberry sprouts the coming season and the job to do over.

Charlevoix county this summer has furnished most of the barberry specimen material that will be used in the United States the coming winter as educational material to acquaint the people in the different states with the characteristics of the bush. 9,500 eight to ten-inch specimens and 57,000 smaller specimens have been collected pressed, dried and shipped to Minneapolis, Minn., where they are to be mounted in windowed envelopes and then distributed in thirteen north central states.

In the past two weeks the barberry scouts have encountered many farmers who have noticed the black stem rust in the red stage on their grain, and as the most common belief goes, the recent rainy season gets the blame for the rust infection. Indirectly the wet season has helped the rust to develop, in that it aids the spore (or seeds) of the black stem rust on the barberry bush to germinate and spread to the grain, but RAIN DOES NOT CAUSE BLACK STEM RUST.

To many people the barberry bush and its connection with black stem rust of the grains and grasses is very questionable. From records and studies made in different parts of the world Denmark has proven the value of common barberry destruction most conclusively. In 1889, 1894, 1895, 1896, 1897 and 1901 black stem rust epidemics swept that country. In January 1904 a barberry law became effective and the destruction of the common barberry bushes in that country took place. Since 1904 there has not been a single rust epidemic in Denmark, and rust is seldom found. Thus Denmark solved her black stem rust problem. No wonder other grain producing countries are following her example.

Through co-operation on the part of the citizens with the local barberry agents, a complete eradication of common barberry bushes can be accomplished. No one should hesitate about reporting a suspicious bush as the barberry agents destroy the bushes without expense or inconvenience to the owner. Report suspicious bushes to Roscoe G. Smith, Charlevoix, Michigan, Box 113.

SYRIAN PRINCESS WILL LECTURE HERE

Princess Rahme at Methodist Church Sunday Evening

Of unusual interest during the summer season comes the announcement of the presence in Charlevoix of the eminent Oriental lecturer and dramatist, Princess Rahme of the ancient Syrian House of Haider—a young woman of exceptional charm and culture, who is enroute from Canada to the east, where she sails for her native land. While here she will present two of her famous recitals, using her home, the Holy Land, as a setting for all. This remarkable young woman, highly educated in her native country and in the higher institutions of learning in the U. S., has won for herself a place among the literary artists in America and today, ranks as the finest interpreter of Palestinian life on the lecture platform.

Princess Rahme

Sunday evening at 7:30, at the Methodist church, Princess Rahme will present her unique and interesting address, "Under Syrian Stars," in which she will paint a modern as well as ancient picture of the historic little country from whence our own ideas of civilization sprung.

Monday evening at 8:00 p. m. in the same church she will give her own dramatic interpretation of that gem in Oriental history, "Ruth and Naomi" preceded by her famous chautauqua recital "Damascus, the Pearl of the East."

The princess is accompanied by her secretary, Miss Lucille Burgess, who furnishes the native Syrian music. Princess Rahme's appearance in rich native costume gives her story a unique setting and makes an entertainment that will linger long in the minds of her audiences.

ANOTHER TAG DAY FOR NEXT SATURDAY

Starr Commonwealth Put on Their Annual Drive

The annual tag day for the benefit of the Starr Commonwealth for Boys will be held in Charlevoix, Saturday, August 21.

The object of the Commonwealth is to maintain a real home for the homeless, friendless and dependent boy; to give to the wild, wayward child of the street the so-called "bad boy," a chance to make good; to direct wisely and lovingly the misunderstood, budgered and beaten child of ignorant or immoral parents, and to provide for the incorrigible a normal, healthful environment, where the lads will be taught the meaning of responsibility and the purpose of law.

Headquarters for the tng day will be at the Holly Gift Shop, where the young people who wish to sell tags are asked to report at nine o'clock Saturday morn ng. Some handsome and useful prizes will be given to the ones who succeed in collecting the largest amounts of money. Among the prizes to be given are an Eastman camera and film, a fountain pen, a gold ring engraved with the year 1926, a flashlight, an abalone pearl ring, u tennis racquet, and a vanity set. The prizes are on exhibition in the window of the Polly Kay shop. The Charlevoix County Bank will act as treasurer of the tag day funds.

Sixty-one boys are at present in the cnre of the Commonwenlth, and these boys have come for "first aid" from all parts of the state. The work receives no state nppropriations and is, to a great degree dependent upon the volantary gifts of the friends of the boys. The Commonwealth is nonsectarian nnd is licensed by the state board of corrections and charities.

Buy a tag Saturday and give the boys who are "somebody's boys" a chance to make good.

There will be a basket picnic nt Maple Grove Grange on Snturday, August 28. Program in the afternoon and dance in the evening.—Adv. 33t2

FORMER RESIDENT DIED IN PETOSKEY AUG. 19

Wright Ripley Was Keeper of Local Lighthouse 37 Years

Wright Ripley, former Charlevoix resident, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Harry Glossinger, in Petoskey, last Friday morning at 1:00 o'clock, after an illness of considerable duration.

Mr. Ripley was born in Canada, April 29, 1855, and was 71 years of age at the time of his death. He came to the United States with his parents when a small boy, the family settling in Huron county, Michigan. He was married in Port Austin, Mich., in 1878, to Miss Carrie Emma Kimball. To this union were born 6 children, four of whom are now living, namely, Clarence Eugene and William Floyd of Benton Harbor; Roy Lee of Charlevoix, and Mrs. Harry Glossinger of Petoskey. He is also survived by one brother, Byron Ripley of Iron River, Wis., and a sister, Mrs. J. Meechnm, residing in Ohio.

Mr. Ripley entered the United States lighthouse service at Port Austin, Mich., in 1882, and moved to Charlevoix in 1885 from which time he took charge of the local lighthouse until the fall of 1922, when he retired from the service on pension after 37 years of faithful service. After retiring from the lighthouse service Mr. Ripley moved to Grand Rapids, where he made his home until the fall of 1925; going from there to Benton Harbor to live with his son, Will, later going to Petoskey, where he resided with his daughter, Mrs. Harry Glossinger, until the time of his death.

Funeral services were held Saturday afternoon, August 21st, at 2:30, from the home of Mrs. Lorenzo Compton, this city. Rev. Herman Burns of the Baptist church officiating. Interment at Brookside.

FRED B. WELLS TO SPEAK THURSDAY NIGHT

Candidate for Lieutenant Governor Will Address Voters

Fred B. Wells, candidate for Lieut. Governor, Speaker of the present House of Representatives, is expected to visit Charlevoix county and will speak from the band stand, corner of State and Mason streets, Thursday evening, August 26. The citizens of this locality should hear him. He is one of the outstanding characters in Michigan affairs, and has represented Cass county in the legislature for more than ten years. During these years he has taken a very active part in state legislation, and his opposition to Mr. Groesbeck has grown out of his thorough knowledge of the administration. Cass county finds no flaws in the record of their representative and are enthusinstic in their efforts to have him made the presiding officer of the next state senate. Hear him next Thursday evening.

INN BENEFIT PROGRAM SUCCESSFUL

FINE PROGRAM GIVEN UNDER DIRECTION OF MISS TRAVIS

Proceeds of Over $300 to Be Given to the Charlevoix Hospital

The benefit ball for the Charlevoix hospital, held in the ball room at The Inn last Saturday evening proved a great success. Miss Calla Travis, possibly one of the greatest dancing teachers in the country, arranged the program and carried it through to a successful conclusion.

One number on the varied program was given by little Caroline Loy, age 10, who danced the old-time, Scotch Highland Fling, to the violin accompaniment played by her Scotch grandfather, Andy Ross, whose fiddling it is claimed, would excell that of Henry Ford's famous fiddler, Jep Bisbee. The act drew a hearty applause.

Another equally interesting number on the program was given by Miss Daphne Hayes, a pupil of the Calla Travis School, who danced two eccentric clog numbers, two French ballet — Gypsiana waltz numbers, and gave an exhibition of the Charleston jazz. Little Miss Regina Mae Kobacker of Columbus, O., gave a spirited Russian dance, which won merited applause.

Other excellent numbers on the program included "The Marionettes" given in costume by Betty Ross and Jane Miller of Charlevoix; the pantomime dance given by Elizabeth Spiers of Oklahoma, who was dressed as a French doll; and the stories and character dances given by a clever group of young children, guests at The Inn, under the direction of Miss Travis.

The Inn orchestra, augmented by several musical artists under the direction of Rudolph Lodersen, added many novelty numbers to the fine program.

The receipts of the entertainment, which will exceed the $300 mark, are to be given to the Charlevoix hospital, and due thanks is hereby extended by the hospital board to those who so generously sponsored the affair.

BAND CONCERT AT AUTO PARK SUNDAY

Boyne City and East Jordan Players Will Participate

On Sunday afternoon, August 29, at 3:00 o'clock, there will be a band concert in the Charlevoix auto park. Band members from the Boyne City and East Jordan organizations will co-operate with the local band, and it is expected that around 60 players will participate.

The idea of co-operative concerts, in our opinion, is a very commendable one. The exchange of ideas will benefit each organization and will tend to develop enthusiasm in band concerts throughout the county. Any rivalry which might exist between the different bands of the county will in this way be dispelled and bring the towns into closer co-operation. The public is invited and urged to attend the concert in the auto park Sunday.

There will be a basket picnic at Maple Grove Grange on Saturday, August 28. Program in the afternoon and dance in the evening.—Adv. 33t2

RESORTER TAKES CITY TO TASK

SAYS CITY IS NOT AN "OASIS" FOR HAY FEVER SUFFERERS

Truth of Statement Made Can Be Verified by Casual Investigation of Local Conditions

The Courier is in receipt of the following communication from a hay fever sufferer, who for a number of years has spent the late summer and enrly fall in our beautiful city:

"In the folder extolling the charms of 'Charlevoix-the-Beautiful' occurs the following: 'Provides an oasis of complete relief for the hay fever sufferers.'

"The truth of this statement is proved by the presence on the streets of men, women and children who greet the passerby with a sneeze, and whose red noses and weeping eyes testify to the 'complete relief' they are enjoying in our beautiful city.

"The clean, pure breezes bring to them on their daily walks, the pollen of their arch enemy, the RAG WEED. Every tiny growth—from three inches high to three feet—is loaded with the sharp pollen which irritates the eyes, ears, nose and throat.

"Every year—beguiled by the relief that in Charlevoix they may breath and sleep normally—the hay fever victim comes here, only to meet with disappointment.

"Why cannot the citizens of the city make it true that there is to be found complete immunity from this distressing malady? Tomorrow the pollen will be flying—why not today, while the earth is soft from the rain, send out the boy scouts or a volunteer committee to pull up, not to cut, these weeds which cause our friends such misery."

And, dear readers, the most unfortunate part of the above communication is that it is ABSOLUTELY TRUE. Ragweed is to be found everywhere about the city. Our streets, alleys, vacant lots, parks and beaches are more or less covered with it. It does not relieve the situation to cut it. The only way to rid our city of it is to pull it up and burn it.

The suggestion made by the writer of the above communication to organize a campaign against this menace is a timely one. If we want the hay fever people here, the ragweed must go. Many towns have rid their community of it in this manner. Many have paid a certain amount per root and the young folks of the town went out and cleaned up the city. This can be done in Charlevoix, and must be done or the hay fever people will go where they can live and breath in comfort.

BOHN A MAN WORTH WHILE

SOMETHING OF HIS CHARACTER AND PERSONALITY

Candidate for Congressional Honors Is a Regular Fellow and Not a Bounder

When a man aspires to a high office it is only right and proper, the public know something of the life, character and personality of the aspirant.

The subject of this sketch is Senator Frank P. Bohn, Newberry's honored citizen and a candidate for Congress from the Eleventh district.

Senator Bohn is genuine, a regular fellow, one who has fought his way up from the bottom through sheer merit and force of character. The folks of Newberry know and love and honor him as a man whose life is clean, whose dealings are fair and whose closet conceals no skeletons. In a large city, a man may carry a brave front, but be a scalawag still. Not so in the small community where each man is each other's neighbor. There the bigness and the littleness, the strength and the weakness of each is known, and honor and trust is given to him who by virtue deserves.

The people of Newberry know Frank P. Bohn. He has served them in numerous capacities and always has he given an accounting of his stewardship.

The love and respect felt for him is not confined to the people of Newberry, but is shared by the folks in the rural districts. They know him as a physician, a friend, sympathizer and advisor in their hours of pain and trouble. They remember how he never failed to answer their call of distress, traveling to the most remote districts in the bitterest winter weather to ease the sufferings of their loved ones. Deep into the hearts of these men and women in the outlying, sparsely settled districts has he won his way—how deep, they alone can tell. But ask any of them and you will get a glowing tribute to this country physician.

Life with Frank P. Bohn, has meant work. He has always been, and still is, a tireless worker. He was born at Charlottesville, Ind., and after graduating from the common schools he decided he wanted to study medicine. His parents were people of modest means and he worked his way through college and graduated with high honors. His penchant for work showed itself in his selection of a place to locate and begin the practice of his profession. Horace Greeley once told young men to go west. Dr. Bohn chose to go north. He had heard of Seney, then in the heyday of its lumbering career, and one day the train deposited him in the lumberjack bailiwick. Seney at that time was the toughest lumbering town in Michigan. He was pioneering in the truest sense. Nothing daunted, however, he hung up his shingle, and one of his first cases was binding up the wounds of a jack who had been crushed by a falling tree; and pulled him through. In a country where roads were almost unknown and means of transportation of the crudest sort, he was

The home of Daniel Himebauch was the scene of a merry reunion last Thursday, August 19, when the "Jolly Bunch," residents of Phelps 25 years ago, gathered to do honor to one of their number, Mrs. John Bushey, of Shelby, Mich., who is visiting her sisters here.

Those present at the jolly party were: Mrs. Sarasin of Boyne City, Mrs. Hugh King and son of Ironton, Mr. and Mrs. Rollie Maddock and daughter, Mrs. Nelson and a lady friend and Mrs. Tete Hipp, all of East Jordan, Mr. and Mrs. A. CO. DAIRYMEN DOUBLE PROFITS

BY ADOPTING COW TEST ASSOCIATION METHODS

Average Cow in State Produces More Milk and Butterfat Than Non-members

Charlevoix county dairymen can practically double their profits from the cows by adopting cow test association methods, says the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. The average test association cow in Michigan produces 3,759 pounds more milk and 132 pounds more butter fat than the cow not in association work.

A glimpse of what ordinary farm cows will do when subjected to cow test association conditions and practices, is to be had from the report of the Wayne county cow testing association, covering the entire herd of 45 cows on the Institute research farm at Redford, Michigan. These cows were such as any farmer can pick up with no previous record, and during the year were subjected to the many vicissitudes of experimental work for which the Institute herd is maintained. Yet figured for the cow test year, and including dry periods, the average production of the entire herd of 45 cows was 10,003 pounds milk and 336 pounds butter fat. This is fully 5,468 pounds milk above the average production for cows in this county. The ten high cows in the herd range in milk production from 11,591 pounds to 28,774 pounds, and a butter fat production of 445.8 pounds to 826.3 pounds. The profit over feed costs for these ten high cows for the year, range from $124.14 to $293.30.

Cow testing associations are the greatest influence for good within the dairy industry, according to Charles Staff, secretary of the Institute. "By the use of the milk scale and the Babcock test the spotlight is thrown on each cow's records, enabling the dairymen to weed out the unprofitable animals and to feed the remainder according to known production. By comparing the records of dam and daughter, promoting the ownership of better sires, encouraging the use of proved sires, and the

The enjoyable affair ended early in the evening, Mr. Moran taking his son's guests for an auto ride, leaving them at their respective homes. Pat received many gifts as mementos of the occasion.

ALL URGED TO ATTEND FREE CLINIC

Friday and Saturday at St. James, Beaver Island

The date on which the free chest clinic which is to be held in Beaver Island will occur has been announced for Friday and Saturday, August 27 and 28 in the Parish Hall at St. James. At this time an opportunity is given wholly without cost to the patient to have a thorough chest examination by a man who has long specialized in chest work. The clinic is for diagnostic purposes only, the clinic examiner does not treat, but patients are referred to their family physician for treatment.

To cure tuberculosis, according to Miss Bauch, the disease must be found in its early stage—hence the importance of frequent chest examinations. A visit to the clinic is urged on the part of all apparently well members of families which have had tuberculosis, and families which have been exposed to the infection through tuberculosis reactors among their farm animals and any others who may have the early symptoms of tuberculosis, a tired feeling all of the time, loss of weight, a persistent cough, and a daily afternoon temperature.

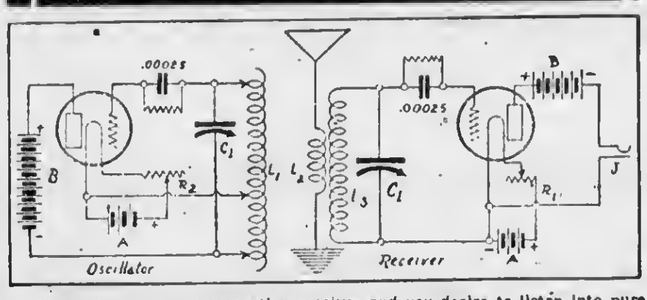
RADIO

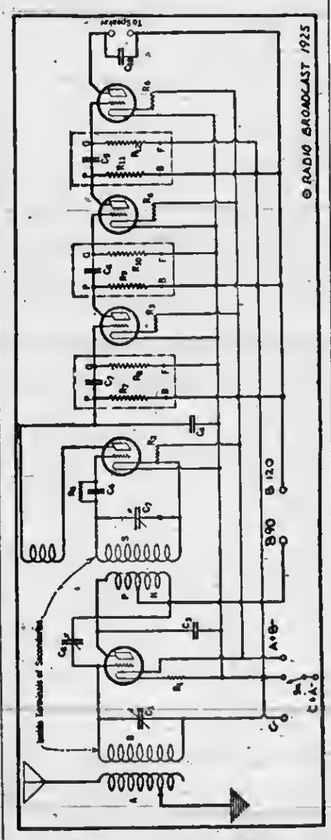


If you have a nonregenerative receiver and you desire to listen into pure CW code signals, the above method will be the solution. L1 consists of 50 turns of No. 22 DCC wire wound on a 3½-inch tubing and tapped at every third turn. C1 is a .0005 mfd. variable condenser. The arrow coming from the A minus is the only variable portion of the coil and goes to the 16 taps. By varying these taps, closer or looser coupling between the plate and the grid can be obtained. Use a UV 201A tube with 67½ volts on the plate.—Radio World.

Sixteen Stations in Three Minutes

Ideal Radio Receiver With but One Main Tuning Control.

One of the chief problems of the home constructor is that of trying to combine sensitivity with quality. It is generally admitted that the superheterodyne represents the utmost in sensitivity but then, on local stations the quality is not what it might be. Possibly this accounts for the fact that many set manufacturers are no longer making a superheterodyne model but are going back to straight radio-frequency amplification. Many receivers on the market only employ a single state of R. F. which will be found quite sufficient for general purposes. Two stages will only complicate tuning, or if single control is employed, the full value of the two stages is often not obtained.



The Five-Tube Aristocrat Receiver.

"For a very long time we have been looking for the kind of receiver which would be easy to build, easy to operate and at the same time be comparatively economical," writes Arthur H. Lynch in the new Radio Broadcast Magazine. "In the receiver described here will be found what we consider a solution of the problem. There is but one main tuning control which makes the finding of stations so simple that a child can secure surprising results. In an actual demonstration, we have been able to show that by means of this single control and no other adjustments whatever, it was possible to hear sixteen stations in less than three minutes, with a single turn of the tuning dial. When other adjustments were made—and where is a DX fan who will not want to be certain that he is getting the last drop of energy out of his set?—we have been able to procure distance with volume, which few receivers other than a superheterodyne could have accomplished. And above all, we have been able to secure tone quality which has been described by many of the radio designers and enthusiasts who have come to witness the performance of our new outfit, as being far superior to most receivers they have seen or heard. We believe this receiver will do much to endear radio to those music lovers who up to the present time have felt that radio reproduction was not sufficiently free from flaws to produce the music they love with true fidelity.

Famous for Tone Quality.

"In the Radio Broadcast 'Aristocrat' there is one stage of tuned, neutralized, radio-frequency amplification, a regenerative detector, and three stages of resistance-coupled amplification. Before going, let it be said that the resistance-coupled amplification employed should not be confused with similar systems described in the past because it is now possible to maintain tone quality, for which this type of amplifier is famous, together with great volume, due to the foresightedness of some of the tube manufacturers who are now marketing what are known as high-Mu tubes. These tubes are specially designed for resistance-coupled amplification and the amplification per stage which is obtainable with them is far greater than has heretofore been generally possible.

"As was mentioned above, tuning is accomplished by a single dial. This dial is used to control a Hammarlund single-control unit and is the main tuning control. It is a unique arrangement of two Remler condensers, geared together in a manner which makes tuning of the antenna and radio-frequency circuits simultaneous. The panel is 7 by 18 inches and there is plenty of room on it for all the equipment necessary, when a sub-base is employed.

"The tuning inductances and the variable condenser assembly, antenna switch and battery switch are mounted on the main panel, while all the remaining equipment is either on the top or bottom of a 2½ by 17½-inch subpanel, which is suspended from the main panel by means of Benjamin No. 000 brackets. On the upper side of the subpanel are mounted the five tube sockets, three resisto-couplers, the grid condenser and leak mounting, and the variable neutralizing condenser. It is also possible to find room for all the binding posts, including those for the three connections for the C battery, if they are thought to be desirable. On the under side of the subpanel there are five mountings which are used for the filament ballast resistors. All these points are clarified by the illustrations of the original article in Radio Broadcast Magazine.

Lists of Parts.

The list of parts used is as follows:
One 7 by 18 panel.
One 2½ by 17½ subpanel.
One Hanscom S. C. condensar unit.
One set Eastern knockout coils.
One Carter filament switch.
Two Apex knobs.
Five Benjamin sockets.
Three Daven resisto-couplers with three .1 megohm resistors and one each 1 meg., .5 meg., and .25 meg. resistors.
One Hammarlund neutralizing condenser.
Two .004 Sangamo fixed condensers.
One Dubilier .5 microfarad by-pass condenser.
Six Daven No. 50 mountings.
One Daven leakandenser (a new unit which combines the grid condenser and leak).
Five Daven ballast resistors (the capacity of these resistors depends on the type of the tubes used).
One Belden standard color, five wire cable.
Two Benjamin No. 000 brackets.
Two to six Eby binding posts.
Two dozen 0 or 8-32 round head, brass machine screws, ¾ inch long.
About six 2-foot lengths of bus bar.

"The five ballast resistors are shown in the diagram as R1-2-3-4-5. The selection of these will depend entirely on the types of tubes employed. The ideal combination of tubes consists in the use of two ordinary six-volt storage battery tubes for the radio-frequency amplifier and the detector, two high-Mu tubes for the first two stages of audio, with a semipower tube in the first stage. Some tubes will work satisfactorily without any resistance in the filament circuit when used as amplifiers."

How Sunset Blights Radio Communication

Next to static electricity, sunset is the greatest deterrent to efficient transatlantic radio telephone communication that nature exerts. During the past two years daily tests across the ocean have been made.

Summarized these show that during the winter months satisfactory conversation can be carried on all hours of the day with the exception of that period when sunset is making its progress across the 3,000-mile expanse of water separating the old and new worlds. During the summer months commercial telephone communication is possible during the morning, evening and night hours, exclusive of heavy static periods, the tests show.—Collier's.

YOUR PLAIN DUTY

Michigan is in the midst of a statewide primary campaign that should arouse the interest of every well meaning citizen in the state. For years we have been hearing much nbout the primary method of nominating candidates for public office, some defending the present system, others declaring it has resulted in a rule by minorities and has failed to give us the advantage of public expression over the old convention system of selecting candidates that its friends said it would.

This year the people of Michigan have an opportunity to register a majority choice in the selection of a candidate for governor in the dominant party for the first time since the primary system was first put into effect. It is the people and not the primary that is now on trial. With an opportunity to register a choice that will be felt it is the duty of every loyal citizen to vote for the candidate that most nearly represents their views. The issues in this campaign are clearly defined and there will be no excuse for the voter man or woman, who fails to exercise his or her privilege.

WHEN TIMBER BURNS

One has only to gaze upon the wide stretches of territory laid waste by forest fires in the upper counties of the state to realize the significance of the oft repeated slogan, "Everybody loses when timber burns." There are spots up in the north country where for miles along the highway the traveler sees the whitened sepulcher of all that remains of once promising forest growth. Like sentinels of death they stand along the bleak trail a warning to the careless person who is liable to leave desolation in his path.

Only the other day a Detroit man spending Sunday on a stream in Cheboygan county lit a cigarette and carelessly flicked a burning match into the grass where he was resting for a few minutes, leaving the scene shortly after to resume his sport. The burning match so carelessly thrown down started a fire that for a while threatened to assume disastrous proportions and had it not been discovered in time by others in the woods, there might have been a timber loss running into thousands of dollars. Plenty of rain over the state in the last few weeks has kept the forest fire loss down to a minimum, but with the coming of the dry Autumn days there is a necessity of increased vigilance to prevent these ravages by the fire fiend. The Michigan Press Association stands pledged to carry on a campaign of education against the criminal carelessness of starting forest fires, a campaign that it is hoped some day will result in saving to future generations the heritage that is so rightfully theirs.

SAUCE FOR THE GANDER

The ultimate necessity of setting up some control as a defense against the tyranny of minorities was long ago foreseen; but the right of labor to work or not to work and to employ collective bargaining for its own advantage is generally accepted, except when it jeopardizes the safety of the public. We have not, however, been so tender with capital. When capital is enlisted in the public service it is tied hand and foot. Verboten signs are everywhere. State or Federal bodies fix rates for service, prescribe its quantity and quality, limit net earnings and pose about at will among all industries of a public nature. Railroad executives may not at their pleasure rip up the tracks of a branch line which can be operated only at a loss. They may not keep their books in any fashion not specifically laid down for them. Utility companies of all sorts operate in harness of strictly legal tape. Price control is forbidden in industry. All along the line the rights of individuals—that is to say, the rights of partners and stockholders—are sacrificed for the common good; and though regulation has sometimes been oppressively applied the principle behind it stands virtually unchallenged. If capital employed in public service should be subject to a thousand intricate restrictions, why should not labor enlisted in the same service be put under sufficient restraint to prevent its becoming a menace to the population as a whole and to the state which that population has set up?—From the Saturday Evening Post.

THE HOME PAPER

Men everywhere are coming more to understand and appreciate the influence of the rural press in the affairs of this country.

Only a few years ago we were told that the local newspaper was passing—that it would not compete with the dailies and weeklies of the big cities—and that it must yield to the inevitable.

But the prophets were wrong. It is true that the local daily or weekly cannot supply in detail all of the news of the world. It cannot compete with its city contemporary in illustrations and features.

And yet the local paper is still with us, and it is growing in strength and usefulness as the years go by. Some of the reasons for its existence are summed up in this paragraph from an exchange:

The local paper should be found in every home. No children should grow up ignorant who can be taught to appreciate the home paper. It is said to be the stepping stone of intelligence in all those matters not to be found in books. Give your children a foreign paper which contains not a word about any person, place or thing, which they saw or perhaps ever heard of, and how could you expect them to be interested. But let them have the home paper and read of people whom they meet and of places of which they are familiar and soon an interest is awakened which increases with every arrival of the local paper. Thus a habit of reading is formed and those children will read the papers all their lives and become intelligent men and women, a credit to their ancestor, strong in the knowledge of the world as it is today.

GET HIM READY FOR SCHOOL

What about the youngster who starts school this fall? Are his teeth in good shape, are his tonsils all right and is his weight up to normal? The child who begins school with the handicap of poor health hasn't a fair chance of competing with his huskier playmates. The time to get him into good condition is before school opens, for every day he has to miss when school starts puts him behind. Mouth breathing, pale color, abnormal weight or lack of weight, and poor appetite, are not natural. They mean that something definite is wrong. A good physical examination by a competent doctor now, whether the child seems to need it or not, may save days and dollars later.

THE NATURAL FEELING

The man in the automobile may be opposed to the Eighteenth Amendment, but he will instantly discharge a drinking chauffeur. The train may be crowded with delegates to the anti-prohibition convention, but they would mob the engineer who would take a drink while driving precious freight. The industrial magnate may talk critically of sumptuary laws, but he will apply them like a despot to the man who watches over the driving power of his vast establishment. When safety is involved, we are all drys.—Senator William E. Borah.

WHICH?

All crossings require the careful attention of autoists whether guarded or not. A train running forty miles an hour has been found to go fifty-nine feet in one second and cannot be brought to a stop in less than a quarter of a mile. An automobile running at twenty-five miles an hour can usually be stopped in less than fifty feet. Which should stop, look and listen at railroad crossing, the train or the automobile?

Local Boy Married

Justin Hanshew, son of Mrs. Eva Hanshew of this city, and Miss Mavis Pendergast of Detroit, were united in marriage Monday, August 23, at Detroit. Mr. Hanshew is a graduate of the local schools and had been attending the University of Michigan prior to moving to Detroit, where the young couple will make their home. Congratulations are extended.

Political Announcement

W. E. Byers.

BURNED TO DEATH IN RUINS OF HOME

Resort Lady Meets Horrible Death at Roaring Brook

Mrs. Katherine Scudder Neff, socially prominent Chicagoian, was burned to death in the flames which enveloped and eventually burned her cottage at Roaring Brook, near Harbor Springs, last Thursday at the noon hour.

Mrs. Neff had been cleaning her clothes and those of two younger children, who were spending the summer with her, and had presumably been using gasoline or some inflammable preparation. She was alone at the time the fire started. A workman heard an explosion and running to the cottage, found the interior a mass of flames. He made a valiant effort to rescue Mrs. Neff, but the fire was of such intense heat that it was impossible.

Her charred remains were later found in an unrecognizable state, lying on the bathroom floor, where she had fallen. Just how the fire started will probably never be known. The remains were taken to the Chicago home.

ANNUAL HOSPITAL MEETING POSTPONED

Scheduled for Wednesday Evening, September 1

The annual meeting of the Charlevoix Hospital, scheduled for the evening of August 18, was postponed for two weeks, and will be held in the Council room, Carnegie library, Wednesday evening, September 1, at 7:30 p. m.

The real cause of the postponement was the non-attendance of members. By members, we do not menn members of the present board, but the attendance of those outside the board of trustees.

Fifteen members are required for a legal annual meeting aceording to the by-laws. At the August 18 meeting two people were present other than board members. The meeting September 1st will be carried if it is necessary to skirmish around and pick up enough members to constitute a quorum.

This meeting is held but once a year, and it seems quite unnecessary to urge the attendance of people who should at least be willing to give one night a year to this work.

At 7:30 p. m. the pastor will preach. This popular service has been well sustained during the summer and much enjoyed by all.

The Ladies' Aid are meeting today with Mrs. McGhan, with a full program.

often called upon to undergo the most gruelling hardship. One instance is related when he was called to attend a case in a distant camp. It was in the dead of winter and a fierce storm was raging. He and a companion pumped and pushed a handcar through the snow to a point where a team was to meet them. Arrived at this point they found no team. The storm was so bad the foreman of the camp never dreamed they would make the trip. To attempt to return meant perishing in the storm so they set forth on an eight mile hike through knee deep snow. Many times on that trip Dr. Bohn wanted to lay down and rest, but his companion knowing the inevitable consequences always urged him on. They finally arrived, both completely exhausted. He attended to his case and saved a life. It was a call of duty and he did it even though he risked his own life in the performance. Is it any wonder the people love and respect him?

When Seney began to decline Dr. Bohn came to Newberry and established a successful practice which he followed until a few years ago. Soon after coming to Newberry he became interested in the Newberry State Bank and was elected its president. His ability as a keen business man here displayed itself. At that time the bank was a struggling institution with footings of but little over $80,000. Today its total assets are over one million, and it is counted one of the strongest institutions in the districts in which it serves. It has had a remarkable record in that the total amount of bad loans it has been compelled to charge off has been almost nil.

Always has he been interested in politics and taken an active part in the affairs of the Republican party. He served many years as chairman of the Republican county committee a job in which he took keen delight. Appointed a member of the Newberry State Hospital board he gained a keen insight into institutional work and was chairman of that board at the time it was abolished. Never has he sought office when any emoluments were involved, but has always been content to serve where the pleasure of service was the chief reward.

Four years ago he was elected to the Michigan State Senate from the Thirtieth district. His outstanding accomplishment during his first term was securing the passage of the state ferry bill that has done more to unite the two peninsulas, and is today paying dividends to every county in the Eleventh Congressional District.

In his second term he fathered and secured the passage of the state primary school fund distribution bill which, in operation, will provide more school money for every county in the Eleventh district, excepting his own home county.

So this is Frank P. Bohn, honored and respected by the people of his home community, because he gives the best he has to his state, city, business friends and family. Trusted because his life is an open book and the pages are clean.

He is a candidate for Congress from the eleventh district. If the people want an orator to represent them in Washington then they will not send him to congress, for he is not a spellbinder and make no pretentions. But if they want a worker, a man with a faculty for making friends, and who knows how to do a job and do it well, then they cannot make a better selection. He will give them the best he has. The country needs more men of the caliber of Frank P. Bohn in Washington.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS

18 Charlevoix County Club Members Attend Gaylord Camp

The first annual boys and girls club camp for northern Michigan was conducted August 17 to 20 inclusive, at the Gaylord fair grounds, with eleven counties represented.

For several years we have hopefully anticipated the time when the several hundred boys and girls in northern Michigan could get acquainted and receive instruction in the various farm subjects and play and work together, and many thanks are due to Gaylord and the Michigan Central Railroad and many other organizations that made the camp possible.

During the week all the demonstration teams competed against each other for the championship of northern Michigan and the honor of representing this section at the State Fair at Detroit, with traveling expenses paid.

The young club members were all fed in one large dining room in regular army style, including regular kitchen police duty and were housed in the various fair buildings. 9:30 p. m. was go to sleep time and shut up and 6:00 was to get up and hurry out for setting up exercises.

The results of the demonstration teams and judging teams were not announced, but Charlevoix county expects to win one or more trips to the State Fair. Charles and Lewis Kleinhans of Clarion gave a very creditable handicraft demonstration, while the calf club members also gave their best to win the high honors.

The following boys and girls from Charlevoix county were included in the 175 attendance:

East Jordan—Eddie Omland, Alfred Larsen, Clarence Trojanek, Lucille Severance, Bruce Sanderson, Arnold Smith, Harvey McPherson, Frank Severance, Oswald Rosegood, W. F. Wurn.

Boyne City—Mary Behling.

Charlevoix—Richard Straw, Rex Supernaw, Albert Elliott, Arthur Elliott.

Clarion—Lewis Kleinhans, Chas. Kleinhans.

Boyne Falls—Cermain Yell.

SYRIAN PRINCESS PRESENTS UNIQUE MESSAGE

Entertains Sunday and Monday Evening at M. E. Church

The Methodist church was the scene of unusual services, when on Sunday evening, the gifted Syrian nrtist, Princess Rahme Hnidèr, of Damascus, presented her famous recital, "Under Syrian Stars." She appeared in her native garb and gave in a most interesting way the manners and customs and history of her native land; tracing the history from the time of Abraham, who was a Syrian, down to the present day, unfolding many of its glorious pages.

She possesses a most charming personality, a keen logical mind and a rare gift of intellect nnd culture. She described the beauties of her native land all of which may be seen from the top of a mountain, a land which is no larger than the state of Kansas and yet from whence our own ideas of civilization and culture sprang. She made a vast distinction between her own people, the pure Semitic—and the Ishmaelites, the Assyrians and the Turks. She pictured her own Syrian race, as the "cream of the East" eager for education and shrewd character readers and today they would be classed among the famous men had it not been for the cruel Turkish oppression.

Monday night Princess Rahme gave her beautiful interpretation of the story of "Ruth and Naomi" in dramatic form. She took the parts of Naomi and Arpah and her secretary the part of Ruth. Preceding the drama she gave her fomus recital, "Damascus, the Pearl of the East," in which she contrasted life in the Orient with life in the West.

Sunday Princess Rahme and Miss Burgess were guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. Salem Musselam at an elaborate Syrian dinner, enrried out in the typical Eastern manner.

Political Announcement

To the Electors of Charlevoix County:

In response to inquiries from vnrious parts of the county, I am tnking this means of advising you that I hnve decided to be a candidate for another term as your Prosecuting Attorney. I have never been in favor of continued office holding, although it is a fact that too frequent changes are detrimentnl to the public service nnd expensive to the taxpayers. It happens to be the case at this time that the only other candidate for the office would be a third term holder, if elected, so both stand on the same footing in that respect.

Another thing that prompted me to be a candidate is that I wish to see the successful completion of important changes and improvements in the methods of handling county business. The records will convince you that during the past three and one-half years considerable has been accomplished of a constructive charncter that has snved the tnxpayers of the county many thousands of dollars. But the time has been altogether too short to do what I believe should be done. There is a lot more to this office than the mere enforcement of the criminal laws. During my term I have tried to keep in touch with the county business with the object in view of co-operating with other county officials and with the city, village and township authorities, to provide better service and cut down county expenses.

I am told by friends that I owe it to you and also to myself to publish a full statement of the facts. But I don't believe this is the proper time to do it for the reason that it could be considered as a political move on my part and that I was "tooting my own horn." The records are public records and show for themselves. Besides I haven't sufficient space here to do it. However, here are a few things which the records show:

1. A large reduction in the expenses of the office, the total being less than one-half of the expenses of former years, all in spite of an increased volume of work.

2. A close supervision over the item of costs in criminal cases to reimburse the general fund. To date close to $8,000 has been paid into the country treasury in fines and costs, a sum more than three times that of any like previous poriod. I do not claim all of the credit for this result, but I do claim that I was instrumental in correcting a former loose condition of affairs.

3. Putting into effect a uniform system of accounts of Justices of the Peace whereby all accounts are passed through the county auditing committee. The county treasurer's books show thnt up to April 1st, 1926, the justices of the county turned into the county treasury the tidy sum of $3,134.46.

4. In co-operation with the county clerk, putting into effect a system of probation and alimony records whereby all money payments are handled through the county clerk's office.

5. Advice and assistance to township and school officers without charge.

6. A careful avoidance of petty prosecutions, thorough investigation before authorizing warrants, and few acquitals by a jury.

7. Not a dollar of county money paid out for the assistance of other attorneys in the trial of cases.

I shall not make an active campaign for the nomination, but will leave the choice entirely to you without any solicitation on my part. If selected by you, I shall give the office the best I have and improve the service wherever possible. I have made mistakes, I know, but they were not wilful nor intentional. I have also made enemies because of the nature of my duties, but I have perseeuted no one.

This is a longer stntement than I intended to make, but I hope it shows you just where I stand, and exactly how I feel. Whatever your decision may be, I shall always be an earnest candidate for the friendship and good-will of the people of Charlevoix county.

Sincerely yours,
A. L. Fitch.

A Mile-a-Minute Mind In a Mile-an-Hour Bus

He had a mile a minute mind and a mile an hour hus! That describes Richard Dix's role in his latest Paramount production, "Let's Get Married," which comes to the Palace Theatre on September 3. You see, his fnther, in an effort to keep Richard on the straight and narrow path, took his high powered car away, nnd gave him an old electric coupe with orders to "take it or leave it." Needless to say—our hero grabbed it.

Stunts on Horse Not Only Things Tom Mix Can Do

In "The Yankee Senor," Tom Mix's newest picture, which comes to the Majestic Theatre Saturday and Sunday, the popular western star demonstrates that he is something more than n mere doer of daring stunts on horseback.

Among other things, the script requires him to execute a peppy tango, since the locale is Mexico. Although tangoing has heretofore been a bit out of the cowboy actor's line, he took an intensive course and, according to advance reports from the Fox West Coast Studios, he maneuvers a saucy limb.

FREE CHEST CLINIC AT THE COURT HOUSE

To Be Given Wholly Without Cost to Patient

The date on which the free chest clinic which is to be held in Charlevoix county will occur has been announced for Monday, August 30 in the Court House at Charlevoix. At this time an opportunity is given wholly without cost to the patient to have a thorough chest examination by a man who has long specialized in chest work. The clinic is for diagnostic purposes only, the clinic examiner does not treat, but patients nre referred to their family physician for treatment.

To cure tuberculosis, according to Miss Bauch, the disease must be found in its early stage—hence the importance of frequent chest examinations. A visit to the clinic is urged on the part of all apparently well members of families which have had tuberculosis, and fnmilies which have been exposed to the infection through tuberculosis reactors among their farm animals and any others who may have the early symptoms of tuberculosis, a tired feeling all of the time, loss of weight, a persistent cough, and a daily afternoon temperature.

NORTH MICHIGAN NEEDS MAN LIKE CAL CAMPBELL

Has Interest of Entire District at Heart and Has No Axes to Grind or Projects to Father—Stands Fair and Square in Interests of People Just as He Has for 48 Years as a Resident of Northern Michigan.

In seeking the office of State Senator from this district, Cal Campbell, former railroad man and now owner of the Campbell Stone Company at Afton, Mich., has no axes to grind. He has no normal schools to locate, and no pet projects to father. He does however, have the utmost faith in the great north country and if nominated and elected will devote his best efforts in its development.

Mr. Campbell, prior to the time he started in the stone business, was a conductor on the Michigan Central Railroad and for years, ran trains into that great wilderness. Gradually it became settled and began to develop. Since the first time Mr. Campbell came into the north (that was back when he was twelve years of age) he has been a lover of this north country and wants to see it made into the great playground that it should be.

It was 48 years ago that Mr. Campbell, then a boy of 12, landed at Gaylord. His family took up residence there and each of the children are now well known throughout the entire north. Mr. Campbell has had ideas about the development of the north. He has watched the progress made by the individual localities. He has watched the growth and has helped in it, but the efforts must be co-ordinated and to this end Mr. Campbell has pledged himself. The resort property around the grent lakes in this region is one of the biggest assets. To get this resort property opened up, the state must take an active interest.

Along the east side of the State, from Alpena to Mackinaw City, the State should begin at once to open up a shore line road that will place upon the tax rolls of the counties, hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of taxable property and at the same time will open up to development miles and miles of beautiful shore line property.

The road along Lake Michigan shore from Mackinaw City to Harbor Springs should be built at once.

These are the things that Cal Campbell stnnds for and there are more, but they are not of a selfish nature. He believes that the whole northern section of the state should unito for the common good of the people and the region. He believes that co-operation among the counties of the north, should and will, if properly directed, do more to develop this section of the state, than any other one thing.

Cal Campbell is not a politician. He is not an office holder. He has never before let his nnme appear as a candidate for anything. He has never asked favors of the Republican party although he has been an active worker in the organization all his life. Mr. Cnmpbell entered the race, not through choice, but because the people of this district urged him to. They wanted a fair and square big, two-fisted man to represent them in the legislture. A man whom they could put their faith in and know that Northern Michigan had a chnmpion from the ground up. Such a man is Cal Campbell and because he is, he agreed after friends hnd asked him for months, to let his name appear on the ballots.

The legislature needs such men ns Cal Campbell who will stand squarely for the things Northern Michigan needs, and Northern Michigan needs such a man in the legislnture.

The people of this district can therefore work to their own interests and the interests of the entire north, if they will but stand together and elect a man as senator who will represent the entire district. Such a man is Cal Campbell of Indian River. In the 48 years he hns lived in Northern Michignn, no mnn lns ever said he wns not fair, square nnd nbove board. Can the people of this great plnyground ask for more in a mnn who is to represent them? Let's forget personal prejudices and elect n mnn who will do something for Northern Michigan in the next two years.—Adv. 34t1

EDUCATED CANINES A FEATURE AT FAIR

"Betty's Pets" Will Present a Series of Tricks Each Day

Much interest is being shown by our renders in the Charlevoix County Fair which will be held September 14, 15, 16, and particularly in the announcement that the committee in charge of the grand stand attractions have secured a wonderful line up of spectacular and sensational performers. In making the selection the committee made ample provision for the amusement needs of the children, for they have arranged for the appearance of "Betty's Pets," a very clever troupe of educated canines. Many dog acts have been seen from time to time, but "Betty's Pets" will present a series of tricks which will show their superior talent as entertainers, the result of long and intensive training by their owners. These little fellows seem to know the very second their time has come to do their stuff and the manner in which they go through their stunts will surely provide wholesome amusement. Their spectacular number is n thrilling feat on a revolving table and with the man and lady of the set appearing in a clown make-up adds to the merriment of the offering.

KEEP YOUR EYE OPEN FOR BOGUS MONEY

Local Bankers Receive Word Counterfeiters Are Busy

"Watch out for bogus $5 bills."

This is the warning received by local bankers who have received telephone information from secret service operatives to the effect that $1 bills raised to $5.00 bills have been picked up at various points.

Charlevoix has been unusually clear thus far this season from bad money, and it is hoped that sales people throughout the city and region would exercise the utmost caution in receiving paper money.

Each summer Northern Michigan is visited by fakers and numerous stores and business places suffer considerable loss. The money usually appears during the season of our big rush when sales people have the least time to give careful handling of funds offered in payment for goods.

Government agents did not report details of their find other than to state that thus far in their investigation they had found eight bills, all $1 bills and all raised to $5.

Five, ten and twenty dollar bills also are increased in denomination by fakers and oftimes find their way into the cash registers of this region.

MARVELOUS DARO WILL THRILL FAIR GUESTS

Will Perform on Pole Eighty Feet from Ground

The amusement features at the Charlevoix County Fair to be held at East Jordan, September 14, 15, 16, 1926, will include a line up of some of the most thrilling and daring performers to be seen on the fair circuits. Secretary Frank F. Bird informs us that great care has been given in the choice of grand stand attractions and will be under the direction of the Western Vaudeville Managers' association.

One of the acts to be featured this year is "The Marvelous Daro." This act is one of the most sensational performances to be given on the outdoor platform. Daro performs incredible feats on a pole eighty feet above the ground. Swift, sensational acrobatic stunts are performed at this dizzy height. Daro virtually walks up this pole and gives a display of acrobatics which is little short of marvelous, standing on his head, foot layouts and finishing with his head-first-slide down the pole showing unequalled skill and daring. This remarkable exhibition will long be remembered by the grand stand visitors.

Why Charlevoix County Grows

We want the state and the United States to know why we grow, and we want our friends who have not assisted us to know that we are some of those who helped it grow. When nsked to assist in any good work some help, some refuse, some do nothing, some say nothing. So it is with all things in the world, and yet with it all we progress. To all those who have helped, we say, we thank you.

Detroit is looking ahead fifty or seventy-five years and will submit a plan for a subway to cost two hundred and eighty million dollars. While Detroit is 288 miles from Charlevoix county, that is only an eight or nine-hour drive and by the time this is finished, undoubtedly there will be special wide concrete roads built and autos will also be built so that the trip from the busy city to the beauty land of Charlevoix county can be made in five or six hours. Is it not a fact that with everything all in our favor we should go ahead now and build a fine twenty-foot wide concrete road around Lake Charlevoix, before some other neighboring county gets in ahead of us and opens up some of their beauty spots, even if they are not as beautiful as our own, now-fast-growing-in-favor-county, we must look ahead and not behind. Every time I look at my card, the one which has the picture of the ox team and hay rick, it take me back in memory seventy-five years when I had to break in a pair of steers every winter, (steers are bull calves about eight or nine months old) and in three years they develop into oxen and are able to do a regular day's work. Even forty years ago they used them here for all farm work, and the time was not long from oxen to auto and tractor. I tell you my friends we can't afford to wait any longer for this long and much talked of concrete road (twenty-foot wide for safety) around the beautiful Lake Charlevoix.

We waited and hung back in the "breechin" a dozen years ago, and by so doing we only got twelve and one-half miles of concrete road instead of getting twenty as we should have done. All new work should be and must be done by high class contractors. We want it up to standard specifications, by honest men. No one without a clear record should be allowed to make even a bid. We want it A-1, strictly first-class or we don't want it at all.

The devices used now for testing the thickness and the mix must be used all along the line in order to shut off any chance for any one to fool away a dollar of our money. The construction of a concrete road around Lake Charlevoix will attract more than enough people in fifteen years to pay off the bonds, when they fall due. All roads from all directions will lead to the great Lake Charlevoix road when its construction is definitely decided upon and settlers will come in and settle anywhere and everywhere along its entire shore. The building of this great lake road will result in a direct promotion of concentration of a large population, even before the road is finished. Now is the time to buy property around Lake Charlevoix and I haven't an acre to sell and no money to buy if I wished to. No favors to ask, no axe to grind, but I am grub staked for the balance of my life.

Now boys get out your bugles. Call loud and long for your friends to help us on in this good work.

Yours,
Uncle George.
